THE deference due to the Public, seems to require an apology for committing letters of private correspondence to the Press, while the Writer is yet living. He is sensible that sending them abroad without his name prefixed, will not of itself be sufficient to obviate the charge of egotism. The manner of expression and thinking, where an author has been repeatedly in print, will mark him out to good judges when they see him again, so as to render any farther description unnecessary.

The solicitation of friends, though a trite, is not always an improper plea, and would probably in the present case be admitted, if he had not determined to conceal the names of his correspondents likewise, and to suppress, as far as possible, every circumstance which might lead to discover them. For they certainly did recommend the publication, and return him their letters purposely that a selection might be made. But as he does not think himself at liberty to declare them, he must forego the advantage of screening himself under the sanction of their judgment.

Posthumous Letters are usually published to a disadvantage. If it be supposed that the Author has friends whose regard to his memory will make them willing to purchase what appears under his name, that circumstance has sometimes given occasion to an indiscriminate and injudicious publication of Letters collected from all quarters, in which more attention is paid to the bulk than the value. For amongst a number of letters written to intimate friends, some will be too trivial to deserve notice, and others may be so intermingled with details of private or domestic concerns, as perhaps to give pain to those who are interested in them, when they see them in print. The writer of the following Letters thought himself more competent to decide at present, which and how much of the papers before him, might be not utterly unworthy of being preserved, than a stranger could be after his decease.

Farther, he finds that between an increase of engagements on the one hand, and the unavoidable effects of advancing years on the other, he can expect but little leisure or ability for writing letters in future, except upon necessary business. By this method of sending to each of his correspondents many letters at once, he takes leave of them with the less regret, persuaded that he thus communicates the substance of all he could offer, if he was able to write to them severally as often and as much at large as in times past.

Though some attention has been paid to variety, it was not practicable wholly to avoid what may be thought repetition, without destroying the texture and connection of many letters; particularly in those which treat of affliction. But where the same subject recurs, it is usually placed in something of a different point of view, or illustrated in a different manner.

Thus much to bespeak the Reader's favorable and candid perusal of what is now put into his hands. But the Writer stands before a higher tribunal; and would be much to be pitied if he were not conscious that in this publication he has no allowed aims, but to be subservient to the gracious designs of God by the Gospel, and to promote the good of his fellow-creatures.

MY LORD,

I Remember when I once had the pleasure of waiting on you, you were pleased to begin an interesting conversation, which to my concern was soon interrupted. The subject was concerning the causes, nature and marks of a decline in grace; how it happens that we lose that warm impression of divine things, which in some favored moments we think it almost impossible to forget; how far this change of frame is consistent with a spiritual growth in other respects; how to form a comparative judgment of our proficiency upon the whole; and by what steps the losses we sustain from our necessary connection with a sinful nature and a sinful world may be retrieved from time to time. I beg your Lordship's permission to fill up the paper with a view to these enquiries. I do not mean to offer a labored essay on them, but such thoughts as shall occur while the pen is in my hand.

The awakened soul (especially when after a season of distress and terror it begins to taste that the Lord is gracious) finds itself as in a new world. No change in outward life can be so sensible, so affecting. No wonder then that at such a time little else can be thought of—the transition from darkness to light, from a sense of wrath to a hope of glory, is the greatest that can be imagined, and is oftentimes as sudden as wonderful. Hence the general characteristics of young converts are zeal, and love. Like Israel at the red sea, they have just seen the wonderful works of the Lord, and they cannot but sing his praise; they are deeply affected with the danger they have lately escaped, and with the case of multitudes around them who are secure and careless in the same alarming situation, and a sense of their own mercies, and a compassion for the souls of others, is so transporting that they can hardly forbear preaching to every one they meet.

This emotion is highly just and reasonable, with respect to the causes from whence it springs, and it is doubtless a proof not only of the imperfection, but the depravity of our nature, that we are not always thus affected—yet it is not entirely genuine. If we examine this character closely, which seems at first sight a pattern and a reproof to Christians of longer standing, we shall for the most part find it attended with considerable defects.

1. Such persons are very weak in faith. Their confidence arises rather from the lively impressions of

of joy within, than from a distinct and clear apprehension of the work of God in Christ. The comforts which are intended as cordials to animate them against the opposition of an unbelieving world, they mistake and rest in as the proper evidences of their hope. And hence it comes to pass that when the Lord varies his dispensations and hides his face, they are soon troubled and at their wits end.

2. They who are in this state of their first love are seldom free from something of a censorious spirit. They have not yet felt all the deceitfulness of their own hearts, they are not well acquainted with the devices or temptations of Satan, and therefore know not how to sympathize or make allowances where allowances are necessary and due, and can hardly bear with any who do not discover the same earnestness as themselves.

3. They are likewise more or less under the influence of self-righteousness, and self-will. They mean well, but not being as yet well acquainted with the spiritual meaning and proper use of the law, nor established in the life of faith, a part (oftentimes a very considerable part) of their zeal spends itself in externals and non-essentials, prompts them to practice what is not commanded, to refrain from what is lawful, and to observe various and needless austerities and singularities, as their tempers and circumstances differ.

However with all their faults, methinks there is something very beautiful and engaging in the honest vehemence of a young convert. Some cold and rigid judges are ready to reject these promising appearances on account of incidental blemishes.

But would a gardener throw away a fine nectarine, because it is green, and has not yet attained all that beauty and flavour which a few more showers and suns will impart? Perhaps it will hold for the most part in grace as in nature (some exceptions there are). If there is not some fire in youth, we can hardly expect a proper warmth in old age.

But the great and good Husbandman watches over what his own hand has planted, and carries on his work by a variety of different and even contrary dispensations. While their mountain stands thus strong they think they shall never be moved, but at length they find a change. Sometimes it comes on by insensible degrees. That part of their affection which was purely natural will abate of course when the power of novelty ceases; they will begin in some instances to perceive their own indiscretions, and an endeavor to correct the excesses of imprudent zeal will often draw them towards the contrary extreme of remissness; the evils of their hearts, which though overpowered were not eradicated, will revive again—the enemy will watch his occasions to meet them with suitable temptations, and as it is the Lord's design that they should experimentally learn and feel their own weakness, he will in some instances be permitted to succeed. When guilt is thus brought upon the conscience, the heart grows hard, the hands feeble and the knees weak; then confidence is shaken, the spirit of prayer interrupted, the armour gone, and thus things grow worse and worse, till the Lord is pleased to interpose. For though we can fall of ourselves, we cannot rise without his help. Indeed every sin in its own nature has a tendency towards a final apostacy; but there is a provision in the covenant of grace, and the Lord in his own time returns to convince, humble, pardon, comfort and renew the soul. He touches the rock and the waters flow. By repeated experiments and exercises of this sort (for this wisdom is seldom acquired by one or a few lessons) we begin at length to learn, that we are nothing, have nothing, can do nothing but sin. And thus we are gradually prepared to live more out of ourselves, and to derive all our sufficiency of every kind from Jesus the fountain of grace. We learn to tread more warily, to trust less to our own strength, to have lower thoughts of ourselves and higher thoughts of him; in which two last particulars I apprehend what the scripture means by a growth of grace does properly consist. Both are increasing in the lively Christian—every day shews him more of his own heart, and more of the power, sufficiency, compassion and grace of his adorable Redeemer, but neither will be complete till we get to heaven.

I apprehend therefore that though we find an abatement of that sensible warmth of affection which we felt at first setting out—yet if our views are more evangelical, our judgment more ripened, our hearts more habitually humbled under a sense of inward depravity, our tempers more softened into sympathy and tenderness, if our prevailing desires are spiritual, and we practically esteem the precepts, ordinances and people of God, we may warrantably conclude, that his good work of grace in us, is upon the whole on an increase.

But still it is to be lamented that an increase of knowledge and experience should be so generally attended with a decline of fervor. If it was not for what has passed in my own heart, I should be ready to think it impossible. But this very circumstance gives me a still more emphatical conviction of my own vileness and depravity. The want of humiliation humbles me, and my very indifference rouses and awakens me to earnestness. There are however seasons of refreshment, ineffable glances of light and power upon the soul, which as they are derived from clearer displays of divine grace—if not so tumultuous as the first joys, are more penetrating, transforming and animating. A glance of these, when compared with our sluggish stupidity when they are withheld, weans the heart from this wretched state of sin and temptation, and makes the thoughts of death and eternity desirable. There this conflict shall cease—I shall sin and wander no more, see him as he is, and be like him for ever.

If the question is, how are these bright moments to be prolonged, renewed or retrieved? We are directed to faith and diligence—A careful use of the appointed means of grace, a watchful endeavor to avoid the occasions and appearances of evil, and especially assiduity in secret prayer, will bring us as much of them as the Lord sees good for us. He knows best why we are not to be trusted with them continually. Here we are to walk by faith, to be exercised and tried; by and by we shall be crowned, and the desires he has given shall be abundantly satisfied.

My Lord, &c.

M Y L O R D,

April — 1766.

I Shall embrace your permission to fill my paper —as to subject, that which has been a frequent theme of my heart of late, I shall venture to lay before your Lordship—I mean the remarkable and humbling difference which I suppose all who know themselves may observe, between their acquired and their experimental knowledge, or in other words, between their judgment and their practice. To hear a believer speak his apprehensions of the evil of sin, the vanity of the world, the love of Christ, the beauty of holiness, or the importance of eternity, who would not suppose him proof against temptation? To hear with what strong arguments he can recommend watchfulness, prayer, forbearance and submission, when he is teaching or advising others, who would not suppose but he could also teach himself and influence his own conduct. Yet alas, Quam dispar sibi. The person who rose from his knees before he left his chamber a poor indigent fallible dependant creature, who saw and acknowledged that he was unworthy to breathe the air or to see the light, may meet with many occasions before the day is closed, to discover the corruptions of his heart, and to shew how weak and faint his best principles and clearest convictions are in their actual exercise. And in this view how vain is man, what a contradiction is a believer to himself. He is called a Believer emphatically, because he cordially assents to the word of God, but alas, how often unworthy of the name! If I was to describe him from the scripture character, I should say, he is one whose heart is athirst for God, for his glory, his image, his presence; his affections are fixed upon an unseen Savior, his treasures and consequently his thoughts are on high, beyond the bounds of sense. Having experienced much forgiveness, he is full of bowels of mercy to all around, and having been often deceived by his own heart he dares trust it no more, but lives by faith in the Son of God, for wisdom, righteousness and sanctification, and derives from him grace for grace, sensible that without him he has not sufficiency even to think a good thought. In short—He is dead to the world, to sin, to self, but alive to God, and lively in his service. Prayer is his breath, the word of God his food, and the ordinances more precious to him than the light of the sun. Such is a believer—in his judgment and prevailing desires.

But was I to describe him from experience, especially at some times, how different would the picture be. Though he knows that communion with God is his highest privilege, he too seldom finds it so; on the contrary, if duty, conscience and necessity did not compel, he would leave the throne of grace unvisited from day to day. He takes up the Bible, conscious that it is the fountain of life and true comfort, yet perhaps while he is making the reflection, he feels a secret distaste which prompts him to lay it down, and give his preference to a News-paper. He needs not to be told of the vanity and uncertainty of all beneath the sun, and yet is almost as much elated or cast down by a trifle, as those who have their portion in this world. He believes that all things shall work together for his good, and that the most high God appoints, adjusts and over rules all his concerns, yet he feels the risings of fear, anxiety and displeasure, as though the contrary was true. He owns himself ignorant and liable to be deceived by a thousand fallacies, yet is easily betrayed into positiveness and self-conceit. He feels himself an unprofitable unfaithful unthankful servant, and therefore blushes to harbor a thought of desiring the esteem and commendation of men, yet he cannot suppress it. Finally, (for I must observe some bounds) on account of these and many other inconsistencies he is struck dumb before the Lord, stripped of every hope and plea, but what is provided in the free grace of God, and yet his heart is continually leaning and returning to a covenant of works.

Two questions naturally arise from such a view of ourselves. First—How can these things be, or why are they permitted? Since the Lord hates sin, teaches his people to hate it and cry against it, and has promised to hear their prayers, how is it that they go thus burdened? Surely if he could not or would not overrule evil for good, he would not permit it to continue. By these exercises he teaches us more truly to know and feel the utter depravity and corruption of our whole nature, that we are indeed defiled in every part. His method of salvation is likewise hereby exceedingly endeared to us;

we see that it is and must be of grace, wholly of grace; and that the Lord Jesus Christ and his perfect righteousness is and must be our all in all. His power likewise in maintaining his own work, notwithstanding our infirmities, temptations, and enemies, is hereby displayed in the clearest light, his strength is manifested in our weakness. Satan likewise is more remarkably disappointed and put to shame, when he finds bounds set to his rage and policy, beyond which he cannot pass; and that those in whom he finds so much to work upon, and over whom he so often prevails for a season, escape at last out of his hands. He casts them down, but they are raised again, he wounds them, but they are healed, he obtains his desire to sift them as wheat, but the prayer of their great advocate prevails for the maintenance of their faith. Farther, by what Believers feel in themselves they learn by degrees, how to warn, pity, and bear with others. A soft, patient and compassionate spirit, and a readiness and skill in comforting those who are cast down, is not perhaps attainable in any other way. And lastly, I believe nothing more habitually reconciles a child of God to the thought of death, than the wearisomness of this warfare. Death is unwelcome to nature—but then and not till then the conflict will cease. Then we shall sin no more. The flesh with all its attendant evils will be laid in the grave—then the soul which has been partaker of a new and heavenly birth, shall be freed from every incumbrance, and stand perfect in the Redeemer's righteousness before God in Glory.

But

But though these evils cannot be wholly removed, it is worth while to enquire, Secondly, how they may be mitigated. This we are encouraged to hope for. The word of God directs and animates to a growth in grace. And though we can do nothing spiritually of ourselves, yet there is a part assigned us. We cannot conquer the obstacles in our way by our own strength, yet we can give way to them, and if we do, it is our sin, and will be our sorrow. The disputes concerning inherent power in the creature, have been carried to inconvenient lengths; for my own part I think it safe to use scriptural language—the Apostles exhort us to give all diligence, to resist the devil, to purge ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit—to give ourselves to reading, meditation and prayer, to watch, to put on the whole armour of God, and to abstain from all appearance of evil. Faithfulness to light received, and a sincere endeavor to conform to the means prescribed in the word of God, with an humble application to the blood of sprinkling, and the promised Spirit, will undoubtedly be answered by increasing measures of light, faith, strength, and comfort, and we shall know, if we follow on to know the Lord.

I need not tell your Lordship that I am an extempore writer. I dropt the consideration of whom I was addressing from the first paragraph; but I now return and subscribe myself, with the greatest deference,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's, &c.

LETTER III.

MY LORD,

April — 1770.

I Have a desire to fill the paper, and must therefore betake myself to the expedient I lately mentioned. Glorious things are spoken of the city of God, or (as I suppose) the state of glory, in Rev. xxi. from verse 10 ad finem. The description is doubtless mystical, and perhaps nothing short of a happy experience and participation, will furnish an adequate exposition. One expression in particular, has I believe puzzled wiser heads than mine to explain. The street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass. The construction likewise in the Greek is difficult. Some render it pure gold transparent as glass; this is the sense, but then it should be neuter διαφανές to agree with χρυσίου. If our reading is right, we must understand it either of gold pure bright and perspicuous as the finest transparent glass (for all glass is not transparent), or else, as two distinct comparisons, splendid and durable as the purest gold, clear and transparent as the finest glass. In that happy world the beauties and advantages, which here are divided and incompatible, will unite and agree. Our glass is clear but brittle, our gold is shining and solid, but it is opaque, and discovers only a surface. And thus it is with our minds. The powers of the imagination are lively and extensive, but transient and uncertain. The powers of the understanding are more solid and and regular, but at the same time more flow and limited, and confined to the outside properties of the few objects around us. But when we arrive within the veil, the perfections of the glass and the gold will be combined, and the imperfections of each will intirely cease. Then we shall know more than we can now imagine. The glass will be all gold. And then we shall apprehend Truth in its relations and consequences, not (as at present) by that tedious and fallible process which we call, Reasoning, but by a single glance of thought, as the sight pierces in an instant through the largest transparent body. The gold will be all glass.

I do not offer this as the sense of the passage, but as a thought which once occurred to me while reading it. I daily groan under a desultory ungovernable imagination, and a palpable darkness of understanding, which greatly impede me in my attempts to contemplate the truths of God. Perhaps these complaints, in a greater or less degree, are common to all our fallen race, and exhibit mournful proofs that our nature is essentially depraved: the grace of God affords some assistance for correcting the wildness of the fancy, and enlarging the capacity of the mind, yet the cure at present is but palliative. But ere long it shall be perfect, and our complaints shall cease for ever. Now it costs us much pains to acquire a pittance of solid and useful knowledge, and the ideas we have collected are far from being at the disposal of judgment; and like men in a crowd, are perpetually clashing and interfering with each other. But it will not be so, when we are completely freed from the effects of sin. Confusion and darkness will not follow us into the world where light and order reign. Then, and not till then, our knowledge will be perfect, and our possession of it uninterrupted and secure.

Since the radical powers of the soul are thus enfeebled and disordered, it is not to be wondered at that the best of men, and under their highest attainments, have found cause to make the acknowledgment of the Apostle, When I would do good, evil is present with me. But, blessed be God, tho' we must feel hourly cause for shame and humiliation, for what we are in ourselves, we have cause to rejoice continually in Christ Jesus, who, as he is revealed unto us under the various names, characters, relations and offices, which he bears in the scripture, holds out to our faith a balm for every wound, a cordial for every discouragement, and a sufficient answer to every objection which sin or Satan can suggest against our peace. If we are guilty, he is our righteousness; if we are sick, he is our infallible physician; if we are weak, helpless and defenceless, he is the compassionate and faithful Shepherd who has taken charge of us, and will not suffer any thing to disappoint our hopes, or to separate us from his love. He knows our frame, he remembers that we are but dust, and has engaged to guide us by his counsel, support us by his power, and at length to receive us to his glory, that we may be with him for ever.

I am, with the greatest deference,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's, &c.

L E T T E R I V.

MY LORD, February — 1772.

I HAVE been sitting perhaps a quarter of an hour with my pen in my hand, and my finger upon my upper lip, contriving how I should begin my letter—a detail of the confused incoherent thoughts which have successively passed through my mind, would have more than filled the sheet, but your Lordship's patience and even your charity for the writer, would have been tried to the uttermost, if I could have penned them all down. At length my suspense reminded me of the Apostle's words, Gal. v. 17. Ye cannot do the things that ye would. This is an humbling but a just account of a Christian's attainments in the present life, and is equally applicable to the strongest and to the weakest. The weakest need not say less, the strongest will hardly venture to say more. The Lord has given his people a desire and will aiming at great things, without this they would be unworthy the name of Christians, but they cannot do as they would, their best desires are weak and ineffectual, not absolutely so, (for he who works in them to will, enables them in a measure to do likewise) but in comparison with the mark at which they aim. So that while they have great cause to be thankful for the desire he has given them, and for the degree in which it is answered, they have equal reason to be ashamed and abased under a sense of their continual defects, and

the evil mixtures which taint and debase their best endeavors. It would be easy to make out a long list of particulars which a believer would do if he could, but in which from first to last he finds a mortifying inability. Permit me to mention a few, which I need not transcribe from books, for they are always present to my mind.

He would willingly enjoy God in prayer—he knows that prayer is his duty, but in his judgment he considers it likewise as his greatest honor and privilege. In this light he can recommend it to others, and can tell them of the wonderful condescension of the great God, who humbles himself to behold the things that are in heaven, that he should stoop so much lower, to afford his gracious ear to the supplications of sinful worms upon earth. He can bid them expect a pleasure in waiting upon the Lord, different in kind and greater in degree, than all that the world can afford. By prayer he can say, you have liberty to cast all your cares upon him that careth for you. By one hour's intimate access to the throne of grace, where the Lord causes his glory to pass before the soul that seeks him, you may acquire more true spiritual knowledge and comfort, than by a day or a week's converse with the best of men, or the most studious perusal of many folios. And in this light he would consider it and improve it for himself. But, alas, how seldom can he do as he would. How often does he find this privilege a mere task, which he would be glad of a just excuse to omit, and the chief pleasure he derives from the performance is to think that his task is finished—he has been drawing near to God with his lips, while his heart was far from him; surely this is not doing as he would, when (to borrow the expression of an old woman here) he is dragged before God like a slave, and comes away like a thief.

The like may be said of reading the scripture. He believes it to be the word of God; he admires the wisdom and grace of the doctrines, the beauty of the precepts, the richness and suitableness of the promises. And therefore, with David, he accounts it preferable to thousands of gold and silver, and sweeter than honey or the honeycomb. Yet while he thus thinks of it, and desires that it may dwell in him richly, and be his meditation night and day, he cannot do as he would. It will require some resolution to persist in reading a portion of it every day, and even then his heart is often less engaged than when reading a pamphlet. Here again his privilege frequently dwindles into a task. His appetite is vitiated so that he has but little relish for the food of his soul.

He would willingly have abiding, admiring thoughts of the person and love of the Lord Jesus Christ. Glad he is indeed of those occasions which recall the Savior to his mind, and with this view, notwithstanding all discouragements, he perseveres in attempting to pray and read, and waits upon the ordinances. Yet he cannot do as he would. Whatever claims he may have to the exercise of gratitude and sensibility towards his fellow-creatures, he must confess himself mournfully ungrateful and insensible towards his best Friend and Benefactor. Ah, what trifles are capable of shutting him out of our thoughts, of whom we say, He is the Beloved of our souls, who loved us and gave himself for us, and whom we have deliberately chosen as our chief good and portion. What can make us amends for the loss we suffer here? Yet surely if we could, we would set him always before us, his love should be the delightful theme of our hearts.

From morn to noon, from noon to dewy eve.

But though we aim at this good, evil is present with us; we find we are renewed but in part, and have still cause to plead the Lord's promise, to take away the heart of stone; and give us a heart of flesh.

He would willingly acquiesce in all the dispensations of divine providence. He believes that all events are under the direction of infinite wisdom and goodness, and shall surely issue in the glory of God and the good of those who fear him. He doubts not but the hairs of his head are all numbered, that the blessings of every kind which he possesses, were bestowed upon him and are preserved to him, by the bounty and special favor of the Lord whom he serves—that afflictions spring not out of the ground, but are fruits and tokens of Divine love no less than his comforts—that there is a need be, whenever for a season he is in heaviness. Of these principles he can no more doubt, than of what he sees with his eyes, and there are seasons when he thinks they will prove sufficient to reconcile him to the sharpest trials. But often when he aims to apply them in an hour of present distress, he cannot do what he would. He feels a law in his members warring against the law in his mind, so that in defiance of the clearest convictions, seeing as though he

he perceived not, he is ready to complain, murmur and despond. Alas, how vain is man in his best estate ! How much weakness and inconsistency, even in those whose hearts are right with the Lord, and what reason have we to confess that we are unworthy, unprofitable servants.

It were easy to enlarge in this way, would paper and time permit ; but, blessed be God, we are not under the law, but under grace. And even these distressing effects of the remnants of indwelling sin, are over-ruled for good. By these experiences the believer is weaned more from self, and taught more highly to prize and more absolutely to rely on him, who is appointed unto us of God, Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification and Redemption. The more vile we are in our own eyes, the more precious he will be to us, and a deep repeated sense of the evil of our hearts, is necessary to preclude all boasting, and to make us willing to give the whole glory of our Salvation where it is due. Again, a sense of these evils will (when hardly any thing else can do it) reconcile us to the thoughts of death, yea make us desirous to depart that we may sin no more, since we find depravity so deep-rooted in our nature that (like the leprous house) the whole fabric must be taken down, before we can be freed from its defilement. Then and not till then we shall be able to do the thing that we would: when we see Jesus, we shall be transformed into his image, and have done with sin and sorrow for ever.

I am, with great deference,

My Lord, &c.

LETTER V.

MY LORD,

March — 1772.

I THINK my last letter turned upon the Apostle's thought, Gal. v. 17. Ye cannot do the things that ye would. In the parallel place; Rom. vii. 19. there is another clause subjoined, The evil which I would not, that I do. This, added to the former, would compleat the dark side of my experience. Permit me to tell your Lordship a little part (for some things must not, cannot be told) not of what I have read, but of what I have felt, in illustration of this passage.

I would not be the sport and prey of wild, vain, foolish and worse imaginations; but this evil is present with me: my heart is like a highway, like a city without walls or gates. Nothing so false, so frivolous, so absurd, so impossible, or so horrid, but it can obtain access, and that at any time or in any place: neither the study, the pulpit, or even the Lord's table exempt me from their intrusion. I sometimes compare my words to the treble of an instrument, which my thoughts accompany with a kind of base, or rather anti-base, in which every rule of harmony is broken, every possible combination of discord and confusion is introduced, utterly inconsistent with, and contradictory to, the intended melody. Ah, what music would my praying and preaching often make in the ears of the Lord of Hosts, if he listened to them as they are mine only.

By

By men; the upper part only (if I may so speak) is heard, and small cause there is for self-gratulation if they should happen to commend, when conscience tells me, they would be struck with astonishment and abhorrence could they hear the whole.

But if this awful effect of heart depravity, cannot be wholly avoided in the present state of human nature, yet at least I would not allow and indulge it; yet this I find I do. In defiance of my best judgment and best wishes, I find something within me which cherishes and cleaves to those evils, from which I ought to start and flee, as I should if a toad or a serpent was put in my food or in my bed. Ah; how vile must the heart (at least my heart) be, that can hold a parley with such abominations, when I so well know their nature and their tendency. Surely he who finds himself capable of this, may without the least affectation of humility (however fair his outward conduct appears), subscribe himself less than the least of all saints, and of sinners the very chief.

I would not be influenced by a principle of self on any occasion, yet this evil I often do. I see the baseness and absurdity of such a conduct, as clearly as I see the light of the day. I do not affect to be thought ten feet high: and I know that a desire of being thought wise or good, is equally contrary to reason and truth. I should be grieved or angry if my fellow-creatures supposed I had such a desire, and therefore I fear the very principle of self, of which I complain, has a considerable share in prompting my desires to conceal it. The pride of others often offends me, and makes me studious to hide my own, because their good opinion of me depends much upon their not perceiving it. But the Lord knows how this dead fly taints and spoils my best services, and makes them no better than specious sins.

I would not indulge vain reasonings concerning the counsels, ways and providences of God. Yet I am prone to do it. That the judge of all the earth will do right, is to me as evident and necessary as that two and two make four. I believe that he has a sovereign right to do what he will with his own, and that this sovereignty is but another name for the unlimited exercise of wisdom and goodness. But my reasonings are often such, as if I had never heard of these principles, or had formally renounced them. I feel the workings of a presumptuous spirit that would account for every thing, and venture to dispute whatever it cannot comprehend. What an evil is this, for a potsherd of the earth to contend with its Maker! I do not act thus towards my fellow-creatures; I do not find fault with the decisions of a judge, or the dispositions of a general, because though I know they are fallible, yet I suppose they are wiser in their respective departments than myself. But I am often ready to take this liberty when it is most unreasonable and inexcusable.

I would not cleave to a covenant of works: it should seem from the foregoing particulars and many others which I could mention, that I have reasons enough to deter me from this. Yet even this I do. Not but that I say, and I hope from my heart, Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O

Lord, I embrace it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, and it is the main pleasure and business of my life, to set forth the necessity and all-sufficiency of the Mediator between God and Man, and to make mention of his righteousness, even of his only. But here, as in every thing else, I find a vast difference between my judgment and my experience. I am invited to take the water of life freely, yet often discouraged because I have nothing wherewith to pay for it. If I am at times favored with some liberty from the above-mentioned evils, it rather gives me a more favorable opinion of myself, than increases my admiration of the Lord's goodness to so unworthy a creature; and when the returning tide of my corruptions convinces me that I am still the same, an unbelieving legal spirit would urge me to conclude that the Lord is changed. At least I feel a weariness of being beholden to him for such continued, multiplied forgiveness, and I fear that some part of my striving against sin, and my desires after an increase of sanctification, arises from a secret wish that I might not be so absolutely and intirely indebted to him.

This, my Lord, is only a faint sketch of my heart, but it is taken from the life; it would require a volume rather than a letter to fill up the outlines. But I believe you will not regret that I chuse to say no more upon such a subject. But though my disease is grievous, it is not desperate; I have a gracious and infallible Physician. I shall not die but live, and declare the works of the Lord.

I remain, my Lord, &c.

LETTER VI.

MY LORD,

MY two last letters turned upon a mournful subject, the depravity of the heart, which impedes us when we would do good, and pollutes our best intended services with evil. We have cause upon this account to go softly all our days, yet we need not sorrow as they who have no hope. The Lord has provided his people relief under those complaints, and teaches us to draw improvement from them. If the evils we feel were not capable of being over-ruled for good, he would not permit them to remain in us; this we may infer from his hatred to sin, and the love which he bears to his people.

As to the remedy, neither our state nor his honor are affected by the workings of indwelling sin, in the hearts of those whom he has taught to wrestle, strive and mourn on account of what they feel. Though sin wars, it shall not reign; and though it breaks our peace, it cannot separate from his love. Nor is it inconsistent with his holiness and perfection to manifest his favor to such poor defiled creatures, or to admit them to communion with himself. For they are not considered as in themselves, but as one with Jesus, to whom they have fled for refuge, and by whom they live a life of faith. They are accepted in the beloved, they have an advocate with the Father, who once made an atonement for their sins, and ever lives to make intercession for their persons. Though they cannot fulfil the law, he has fulfilled it for them. Though the obedience of the members is defiled and imperfect, the obedience of the head is spotless and complete. And though there is much evil in them, there is something good, the fruit of his own gracious Spirit. They act from a principle of love, they aim at no less than his glory, and their habitual desires are supremely fixed upon himself. There is a difference in kind between the feeblest efforts of faith in a real believer, while he is covered with shame at the thoughts of his miscarriages, and the highest and most specious attainments of those who are wise in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight. Nor shall this conflict remain long, or the enemy finally prevail over them. They are supported by almighty power, and led on to certain victory. They shall not always be as they are now; yet a little while and they shall be freed from this vile body, which like the leprous house is incurably contaminated, and must be entirely taken down. Then they shall see Jesus as he is, and be like him and with him for ever.

The gracious purposes to which the Lord makes the sense and feeling of our depravity subservient, are manifold. Hereby his own power, wisdom, faithfulness and love are more signally displayed. His power in maintaining his own work in the midst of so much opposition, like a spark burning in the water, or a bush unconsumed in the flames. His wisdom in defeating and controlling all the devices which Satan, from his knowledge of the evil of our nature, is encouraged to practise against us. He has overthrown many a fair professor, and, like Goliath, he challenges the whole army of Israel, yet he finds there are some against whom, though he thrusts sorely, he cannot prevail; notwithstanding any seeming advantage he gains at some seasons, they are still delivered, for the Lord is on their side. The unchangeableness of the Lord's love, and the riches of his mercy are likewise more illustrated by the multiplied pardons he bestows upon his people, than if they needed no forgiveness at all.

Hereby the Lord Jesus Christ is more endeared to the soul; all boasting is effectually excluded, and the glory of a full and free salvation is ascribed to him alone. If a mariner is surprized by a storm, and after one night spent in jeopardy is presently brought safe into port, though he may rejoice in his deliverance, it will not affect him so sensibly as if, after being tempest-tossed for a long season, and experiencing a great number and variety of hair-breadth escapes, he at last gains the desired haven. The righteous are said to be scarcely saved, not with respect to the certainty of the event, for the purpose of God in their favor cannot be disappointed, but in respect to their own apprehensions and the great difficulties they are brought through. But when after a long experience of their own deceitful hearts, after repeated proofs of their weakness, wilfulness, ingratitude and insensibility, they find that none of these things can separate them from the love of God in Christ, Jesus becomes becomes more and more precious to their souls. They love much, because much has been forgiven them. They dare not, they will not ascribe any thing to themselves, but are glad to acknowledge that they must have perished (if possible) a thousand times over, if Jesus had not been their Savior, their Shepherd and their Shield. When they were wandering he brought them back, when fallen he raised them, when wounded he healed them, when fainting he revived them. By him out of weakness they have been made strong, he has taught their hands to war, and covered their heads in the day of battle. In a word, some of the clearest proofs they have had of his excellence, have been occasioned by the mortifying proofs they have had of their own vileness. They would not have known so much of him, if they had not known so much of themselves.

Farther, a spirit of humiliation, which is both the Decus et Tutamen, the strength and beauty of our profession, is greatly promoted by our feeling as well as reading that when we would do good evil is present with us. A broken and contrite spirit is pleasing to the Lord, he has promised to dwell with those who have it, and experience shews that the exercise of all our graces is in proportion to the humbling sense we have of the depravity of our nature. But that we are so totally depraved is a truth which no one ever truly learnt by being only told it. Indeed if we could receive and habitually maintain a right judgment of ourselves, by what is plainly declared in scripture, it would probably save us many a mournful hour; but experience is the Lord's school, and they who are taught by him usually learn that they have no wisdom by the mistakes they make, and that they have no strength by the slips and falls they meet with. Every day draws forth some new corruption which before was little observed, or at least discovers it in a stronger light than before. Thus by degrees they are weaned from leaning to any supposed wisdom, power or goodness in themselves, they feel the truth of our Lord's words, without me ye can do nothing—and the necessity of crying with David, O lead me and guide me for thy name's sake. It is chiefly by this frame of mind that one Christian is differentiated from another. For though it is an inward feeling, it has very observable outward effects, which are expressively intimated, Ezek. xvi. 63. Thou shalt be dumb and not open thy mouth, in the day when I am pacified towards thee, saith the Lord God. The knowledge of my full and free forgiveness, of thy innumerable backslidings and transgressions shall make thee ashamed, and silence the unruly workings of thine heart. Thou shalt open thy mouth in praise, but thou shalt no more boast in thyself, or censure others, or repine at my dispensations. In these respects we are exceedingly prone to speak unadvisedly with our lips. But a sense of great unworthiness and much forgiveness checks these evils. Whoever is truly humbled will not be easily angry, will not be positive and rash, will be compassionate and tender to the infirmities of his fellow-sinners, knowing that if there be a difference it is grace that has made it, and that he has the seeds of every evil in his own heart.

heart. And under all trials and afflictions he will look to the hand of the Lord, and lay his mouth in the dust, acknowledging that he suffers much less than his iniquities have deserved. These are some of the advantages, and good fruits, which the Lord enables us to obtain from that bitter root, indwelling sin.

I am, with great deference,

My Lord, &c.

LETTER VII.

MY LORD,

September — 1772.

WEAK, unskilful and unfaithful as I am in practice, the Lord has been pleased to give me some idea of what a Christian ought to be, and of what is actually attainable in the present life, by those whom he enables earnestly to aspire towards the prize of their high calling. They who are versed in Mechanics can, from a knowledge of the combined powers of a complicated machine, make an exact calculation of what it is able to perform, and what resistance it can counteract; but who can compute the possible effects of that combination of principles and motives revealed in the gospel, upon a heart duly impressed with a sense of their importance and glory? When I was lately at Mr. Cox's Museum, while I was fixing my attention upon some curious movements, imagining that I saw the whole of the Artist's design, the person who shewed it touched a little spring, and suddenly a thousand new and unexpected motions took place, and the whole piece seemed animated from the top to the bottom. I should have formed but a very imperfect judgment of it, had I seen no more than what I saw at first. I thought it might in some measure illustrate the vast difference that is observable amongst professors, even amongst those who are it is to be hoped sincere. There are persons who appear to have a true knowledge (in part) of the nature of the gospel religion, but seem not to be apprized of its properties in their comprehension and extent. If they have attained to some hope of their acceptance, if they find at seasons some communion with God in the means of grace, if they are in measure delivered from the prevailing and corrupt customs of the world, they seem to be satisfied as if they were possessed of all. These are indeed great things, Sed meliora latent. The profession of too many, whose sincerity Charity would be unwilling to impeach, is greatly blemished notwithstanding their hopes and their occasional comforts, by the breakings forth of un sanctified tempers, and the indulgence of vain hopes, anxious cares and selfish pursuits. Far, very far am I from that unscriptural sentiment of sinless perfection in fallen man. To those who have a due sense of the spirituality and ground of the divine precepts, and of what passes in their own hearts, there will never be wanting causes of humiliation and self-abasement on the account of sin; yet still there is a liberty and privilege attainable by the gospel beyond what is ordinarily thought of. Permit me to mention two or three particulars, in which those who have a holy ambition of aspiring to them shall not be altogether disappointed.

A delight in the Lord's all-sufficiency. To be satisfied in him as our present and eternal portion. This, in the sense in which I understand it, is not the effect of a present warm frame, but of a deeply-rooted and abiding principle. The habitual exercise of which is to be estimated by the comparative rative indifference with which other things are regarded. The soul thus principled is not at leisure to take or to seek satisfaction, in any thing but what has a known subserviency to this leading taste. Either the Lord is present, and then he is to be rejoiced in, or else he is absent, and then he is to be sought and waited for. They are to be pitied who, if they are at some times happy in the Lord, can at other times be happy without him, and rejoice in broken cisterns when their spirits are at a distance from the fountain of living waters. I do not plead for an absolute indifference to temporal blessings, he gives us all things richly to enjoy, and a capacity of relishing them is his gift likewise; but then the consideration of his love in bestowing should exceedingly enhance the value, and a regard to his will should regulate their use. Nor can they all supply the want of that which we can only receive immediately from himself. This principle likewise moderates that inordinate fear and sorrow to which we are liable upon the prospect or the occurrence of great trials, for which there is a sure support and resource provided in the all-sufficiency of infinite goodness and grace. What a privilege is this to possess God in all things while we have them, and all things in God, when they are taken from us.

An acquiescence in the Lord's will, founded in a persuasion of his wisdom, holiness, sovereignty and goodness. This is one of the greatest privileges and brightest ornaments of our profession. So far as we attain to this we are secure from disappointment. Our own limited views and short-fought purposes and desires may be and will be often over-ruled, but then our main and leading desire, that the will of the Lord may be done, must be accomplished. How highly does it become us, both as creatures and as sinners, to submit to the appointments of our Maker, and how necessary is it to our peace! This great attainment is too often unthought of and overlooked; we are prone to fix our attention upon the second causes and immediate instruments of events, forgetting that whatever befalls us is according to his purpose, and therefore must be right and seasonable in itself, and shall in the issue be productive of good. From hence arise impatience, resentment and secret repinings, which are not only sinful but tormenting. Whereas if all things are in his hand, if the very hairs of our head are numbered, if every event great and small is under the direction of his providence and purpose; and if he has a wise, holy and gracious end in view, to which every thing that happens is subordinate and subservient—then we have nothing to do but with patience and humility to follow as he leads, and cheerfully to expect a happy issue. The path of present duty is marked out, and the concerns of the next and every succeeding hour are in his hands. How happy are they who can resign all to him, see his hand in every dispensation, and believe that he chooses better for them than they possibly could for themselves.

A single eye to his glory as the ultimate scope of all our undertakings. The Lord can design nothing short of his own glory, nor should we. The constraining love of Christ has a direct and marvellous tendency, in proportion to the measure of faith, to mortify the corrupt principle, Self, which for a season is the grand spring of our conduct, and by which we are too much biassed after we know the Lord. But as grace prevails, self is renounced. We feel that we are not our own, that we are bought with a price, and that it is our duty, our honour and our happiness, to be the servants of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ. To devote soul and body, every talent, power and faculty, to the service of his cause and will; to let our light shine (in our several situations) to the praise of his grace; to place our highest joy in the contemplation of his adorable perfections; to rejoice even in tribulations and distresses, in reproaches and infirmities, if thereby the power of Christ may rest upon us and be magnified in us; to be content, yea glad to be nothing, that he may be all in all;—to obey him, in opposition to the threats or solicitations of men, to trust him though all outward appearances seem against us, to rejoice in him though we should (as will sooner or later be the case) have nothing else to rejoice in—to live above the world and to have our conversation in heaven, to be like the Angels finding our own pleasure, in performing his: This, my Lord, is the prize—the mark of our high calling, to which we are encouraged with a holy ambition continually to aspire. It is true we shall still fall short, we shall find that when we would do good, evil will be present with us. But the attempt is glorious, and shall not be wholly in vain. He that gives us thus to will, will enable enable us to perform with growing success, and teach us to profit even by our mistakes and imperfections.

O blessed man ! that thus fears the Lord, that delights in his word, and derives his principles, motives, maxims and consolations, from that unfailing source of light and strength. He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, whose leaf is always green and fruit abundant. The wisdom that is above shall direct his plans, inspire his counsels, and the power of God shall guard him on every side, and prepare his way through every difficulty ; he shall see mountains sink into plains, and streams spring up in the dry wilderness. The Lord's enemies will be his, and they may be permitted to fight against him, but they shall not prevail, for the Lord is with him to deliver him. The conduct of such a one, though in a narrow and retired sphere of life, is of more real excellence and importance, than the most splendid actions of kings and conquerors, which fill the annals of history. Prov. xvi. 32. And if the God whom he serves is pleased to place him in a more public light, his labors and cares will be amply compensated, by the superior opportunities afforded him, of manifesting the power and reality of true religion, and promoting the good of mankind.

I hope I may say that I desire to be thus intirely given up to the Lord ; I am sure I must say, that what I have written, is far from being my actual experience. Alas, I might be condemned out of my own mouth, were the Lord strict to mark what is amiss. But O the comfort, we are not under the law but under grace. The gospel is a dispensation for sinners, and we have an advocate with the Father. There is the unshaken ground of hope. A reconciled Father, a prevailing Advocate, a powerful Shepherd, a compassionate Friend; a Savior who is able and willing to save to the uttermost. He knows our frame, he remembers that we are but dust, and has opened for us a new and blood-besprinkled way of access to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in every time of need. I am,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's, &c.

FOR five or six weeks past I have been a good deal indisposed. The ground of my complaint was a cold, attended with a slight fever, and for some time with a cough, which made me feel some inconvenience in preaching; to this succeeded a deafness, so great as to cut me off from conversation, for I could not hear the sound of a voice unless it was spoken loud in my ear. But the Lord has mercifully removed the fever and cough, opened my ears, and I am now nearly as well as usual. I had cause to be thankful especially for two things under this dispensation; first, that I was enabled, though sometimes with a little difficulty, to go on with my public work. It is a singular favor I have to acknowledge, that for the space of almost nine years, since I have been in the Ministry, our sabbath and weekly opportunities have not been once suspended: whereas I have seen many of the Lord's servants laid by for a considerable space, within that time. My other great mercy was, that the Lord was pleased to preserve me in a peaceful resigned frame, so that when I was deaf, and could not be certain that I should recover my hearing any more, I was in general as chearful and easy as at other times. This was the effect of his goodness—for though I know enough of his sovereignty, wisdom and faithfulness, of his right to do what he pleases, and the certainty that he does all things well, to furnish me with arguments enough to prove that submission to his will is our absolute duty, yet I am sensible that when the trial actually comes, notwithstanding all the advice I may have offered to others, I should myself toss like a wild bull in a net, rebel and repine, forget that I am a sinner and that he is sovereign; this I say would always and invariably be the case, unless he was graciously pleased to fulfil his word, that strength shall be according to the day. I hope my deafness has been instructive to me. The exercise of our senses is so easily and constantly performed, that it seems a thing of course; but I was then reminded how precarious the tenure is by which we hold those blessings which seem most our own, and which are most immediately necessary to the comfortable enjoyment of life. Outward senses, mental faculties, health of body and peace of mind, are extremely valuable, but the continuance of them for a single moment depends upon him who if he opens none can shut, and when he shuts none can open. A minute is more than sufficient to deprive us of what we hold most dear, or to prevent us from deriving the least comfort from it if it is not taken away. I am not presuming to give your Lordship information, but only mentioning the thoughts that were much upon my mind, while I was incapable of conversation. These are indeed plain and obvious truths, which I have long acknowledged as indisputable; but I have reason to be thankful when the Lord impresses them with fresh power upon my heart, even though he

he sees fit to do it by the medium of afflictions. I have seen of late something of the weight and importance of that admonition, Jer. ix. 23, 24. A passage which, though addressed to the wise, the mighty and the rich, is of universal application—for self, unless corrected and mortified by grace, will find something whereof to glory, in the meanest characters and the lowest situation. And indeed when things come to be weighed in the balance of the sanctuary, the Lunatics in Bedlam, some of whom glory in their straw or their chains, as marks of splendor, or ensigns of royalty, have as much reason on their side, as any persons upon earth who glory in themselves. This alone is the proper ground of glory and joy, if we know the Lord—then all is safe at present, and all will be happy for ever. Then, whatever changes may affect our temporal concernments, our best interests and hopes are secured beyond the reach of change. And whatever we may lose or suffer during this little span of time, will be abundantly compensated in that glorious state of eternity, which is just at hand.

I am, my Lord,

Your Lordship's, &c.

LETTER IX.

MY LORD,

Dec. — 1772.

I Lately employed some of my leisure hours, (which when I am not indolent are but few) in reading the Memoirs of the Duke of Sully, which occasionally came in my way. It afforded me matter for variety of reflections. I pity the Duke of Sully, whose attachment to the name of a Protestant seems to have been little more than a point of honor, who drew all his resources from himself, and whose chief aim seems to have been to approve himself faithful to an earthly Master. He acted as well as could be expected from natural principles, and the Lord who employed him as an instrument of his providence, rewarded his fidelity with success, honor and riches. A reward which though in itself a poor one, is suited to the desires of men who place their happiness in worldly things, and is so far a compensation of their services. It is given to your Lordship to act from nobler principles, and with more enlarged views. You serve a Master of whose favor, protection and assistance you cannot be deprived, who will not overlook or misconstrue the smallest service you attempt for him, who will listen to no insinuations against you, who is always near to comfort, direct and strengthen you, and who is preparing for you such honors and blessings as he only can give, an inheritance (the reverse of all earthly good) αφθαρτον και αμικαντον και αμαραντον *. Thus animated and thus supported, assisted likewise by the prayers of thousands, may we not warrantably hope that your Lordship will be an instrument of great good, and that both church and state will be benefitted by your example, counsels and care.

In another view the Duke of Sully's History exhibits a comment upon the Psalmist's words, Surely man in his best estate is altogether vanity. View him in one light he seems to have possessed all that the most aspiring mind could aim at—The favor and confidence of his prince, accumulated wealth, great honors, and such power by his offices and influence with the king, that he could almost do what he pleased. Yet he had so much to suffer from the fatigues and difficulties of his station, and the cabals and malice of his enemies, that in the midst of all his grandeur a dispassionate mind would rather pity than envy him. And how suddenly were his schemes broken by the death of the king. Then he lost his friend, his protector, his influence. The remainder of his days were imbittered by many inquietudes; he lived indeed (if that could afford any consolation) in much state and pageantry afterwards, but after having toiled through more than fourscore years, died at last almost of a broken heart from domestic uneasinesses. And is this all that the world can do for those who are accounted most successful! Alas,

Too low they build who build below the skies.

* Incorruptible, undefiled, unfading.

And what a picture of the instability of human things have we in his Master Henry! Admired, beloved, dreaded. Full of vast designs, fondly supposing himself born to be the arbitor of Europe, in an awful moment, and in the midst of his friends, suddenly struck from the height of his grandeur, and snatched into the invisible, unchangeable world. In that moment all his thoughts perished.

How unspeakably awful such a transition! How remarkable were his own forebodings of the approaching hour! O Lord, how dost thou pour contempt upon princes, and teach us that the great and the mean are equally in thy hands and at thy disposal, as clay in the hands of the Potter. Poor king! while he expected obedience to his own commands, he lived in habitual defiance of the commands of God. Men may respect his memory, for his sincerity, benevolence and other amiable qualities; but besides that he was engrossed by a round of sensual pleasure, (when business of state did not interfere) his life was stained with adultery. Happy, if in the hours he spent in retirement, when the preintimation of his death hung heavy upon his mind, the Lord humbled and softened his heart, and gave him repentance unto life. I wish the history afforded a proof of this. However, in his death, we see an affecting proof, that no human dignity or power can ward off the stroke of the Almighty, who by such sudden and unexpected dispensations often shews himself terrible to the princes and great men of the earth. O that they could see his hand, and wisely consider his doing in them.

But happy is the man who fears the Lord and delights in his commandments. Who sets God always before him, and acts under the constraining influence of redeeming love. He is the real friend and the best champion of his country, who makes, not the vague notions of human wisdom and honor, but the precepts and example of the blessed Jesus, the model and the motive of his conduct. He inculcates (as occasion offers) the great truths of religion in his conversation, and demonstrates them by his practice; yet the best part of his life is known only to God and himself. His time is divided between serving his country in public, and wrestling for it in private. Nor shall his labors or his prayers be lost. Either he shall have the desire of his heart, and shall see the religion and the liberty he so highly values transmitted to posterity; or, if he should live when wrath is decreed and there is no remedy, the promise and the providence of God shall seal him as the peculiar charge of Angels, in the midst of public calamity. And when all things are involved in confusion, when the hearts of the wicked shall shake like the leaves of the forest, he shall be kept in perfect peace trusting in the Lord. I am,

With the greatest deference,

My Lord, &c.

LETTER X.

USUALLY for some days before I purpose writing to your Lordship, my thoughts are upon the stretch for a subject; I do not mean all day long; but it is so more or less; but I might as well spare my enquiries, I can come to no determination, and for the most part begin to write at an absolute uncertainty how I am to proceed. Since I cannot premeditate, my heart prays that it may be given me in the same hour what I shall offer. A simple dependance upon the teaching and influence of the good Spirit of God, so as not to supersede the use of appointed means, would, if it could be uniformly maintained, make every part of duty easy and successful. It would free us from much solicitude, and prevent many mistakes.— Methinks I have a subject in view already, a subject of great importance to myself, and which perhaps will not be displeasing to your Lordship, How to walk with God in the daily occurrences of life, so as to do every thing for his sake, and by his strength.

When we are justified by faith and accepted in the beloved, we become heirs of everlasting life, but we cannot know the full value of our privileges till we enter upon the state of glory. For this, most who are converted have to wait some time after they are partakers of grace. Though the

Lord loves them, hates sin, and teaches them to hate it, he appoints them to remain a while in a sinful world, and to groan under the burden of a depraved nature. He could put them in immediate possession of the heaven for which he has given them a meetness, but he does not. He has a service for them here, an honor which is worth all they can suffer, and for which eternity will not afford an opportunity, namely, to be instruments of promoting his designs, and manifesting his grace in the world. Strictly speaking, this is the whole of our business here, the only reason why life is prolonged, or for which it is truly desirable, that we may fill up our connections and situations, improve our comforts and our crosses in such a manner, as that God may be glorified in us and by us. As he is a bountiful Master and a kind Father, he is pleased to afford a variety of temporal blessings, which sweeten our service, and as coming from his hand are very valuable, but are by no means worth living for considered in themselves, as they can neither satisfy our desires, preserve us from trouble, or support us under it. That light of God's countenance which can pervade the walls and dissipate the gloom of a dungeon, is unspeakably preferable to all that can be enjoyed in a palace without it. The true end of life is to live not to ourselves but to him who died for us, and while we devote ourselves to his service upon earth, to rejoice in the prospect of being happy with him for ever in heaven. These things are generally known and acknowledged by Professors, but they are a few who act consistently with their avowed principles, ciples, who honestly, diligently and without reserve endeavor to make the most of their talents and strength in promoting the Lord's service, and allow themselves in no views or designs but what are plainly subordinate and subservient to it. Yea, I believe the best of the Lord's servants see cause enough to confess, that they are not only unprofitable in comparison of what they wish to be, but in many instances unfaithful likewise. They find so many snares, hindrances and temptations arising from without, and so much embarrassment from sin which dwells within, that they have more cause for humiliation than self-complacence, when they seem most earnest and most useful. However, we have no scriptural evidence that we serve the Lord at all, any farther than we find an habitual desire and aim to serve him wholly. He is gracious to our imperfections and weakness, yet he requires all the heart, and will not be served by halves, nor accept what is performed by a divided spirit. I lately met with some profane scoffs of Voltaire upon the sentiment of doing all to the glory of God; (such as might be expected from such a man) however, this is the true Alchemy which turns every thing to gold, and ennobles the common actions of life into acts of religion. 1 Cor. x, 31. Nor is there a grain of real goodness in the most specious actions which are performed without a reference to God's glory. This the world cannot understand, but it will appear highly reasonable to those who take their ideas of God from the scripture, and who have felt the necessity and found the benefits of redemption—we are debtors many ways. The Lord has a right to us by creation, by redemption, by conquest, when he freed us from Satan's power, and took possession of our hearts by his grace; and lastly, by our own voluntary surrender in the day when he enabled us to fix our choice on himself as our Lord and our portion. Then we felt the force of our obligations, we saw the beauty and honour of his service, and that nothing was worthy to stand in the least degree of competition with it. This is always equally true, though our perceptions of it are not always equally strong. But where it has been once really known, it cannot be wholly forgotten, or cease to be the governing principle of life; and the Lord has promised to revive the impression in those who wait upon him, and thereby to renew their strength. For in proportion as we feel by what ties we are his, we shall embrace his service as perfect freedom.

Again, when the eye is thus single the whole body will be full of light. The principle of acting simply for God, will in general make the path of duty plain, solve a thousand otherwise dubious questions, lead to the most proper and obvious means, and preclude that painful anxiety about events, which upon no other plan can be avoided. The love of God is the best Casuist, especially as it leads us to a careful attendance to his precepts, a reliance on his promises, and a submission to his will. Most of our perplexities arise from an undue, though perhaps unperceived attachment to self. Either we have some scheme of our own too closely connected with our general view of serving the Lord, or lay some stress upon our own management, which, though we suspect it may possibly fail us, we cannot intirely help trusting to. In these respects the Lord permits his servants occasionally to feel their own weaknes; but if they are sincerely devoted to him, he will teach them to profit by it, and bring them by degrees to a simplicity of dependance, as well as of intention. Then all things are easy. Acting from love and walking by faith, they can neither be disappointed or discouraged. Duty is their part, care is his, and they are enabled to cast it upon him. They know that when their expedients seem to fail, He is still all-sufficient. They know that being engaged in his cause they cannot miscarry, and that though in some things they may seem to fall short of success, they are sure of meeting acceptance, and that he will estimate their services not by their actual effects, but according to the gracious principle and desire he has put into their hearts. 2 Chron. vi. 7, 8.

I am, with the greatest respect,
My Lord, &c.

MY old cast-off acquaintance, Horace, occasionally came in my way this morning. — I opened it upon lib. 3. od. 29. Did I not know the proposal to be utterly impracticable, how gladly should I imitate it, and send your Lordship in honest prose, if not in elegant verse, an invitation. But I must content myself with the idea of the pleasure it would give me to set with you half a day under my favorite great tree, and converse with you, not concerning the comparatively petty affairs of human governments, but of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. How many delightful subjects would suggest themselves in a free and retired conversation. The excellency of our King, the permanency and glory of his kingdom, the beauty of his administration, the privileges of his subjects, the review of what he has done for us, and the prospect of what he has prepared for us in future; — and if while we were conversing, he should be pleased to join us (as he did the Disciples when walking to Emmaus) how would our hearts burn within us. Indeed, whether we are alone or in company, the most interesting topics strike us but faintly, unless he is pleased to afford his gracious influence; but when he is present, light, love, liberty and joy spring up in the hearts that know him.

him.—This reminds me (as I have mentioned Horace) to restore some beautiful lines to their proper application. They are impious and idolatrous as he uses them, but have an expressive propriety in the mouth of a believer——

*Lucem redde tuæ, Dux bone, patriæ, Instar veris enim vultus ubi tuus
Affulsit populo, gratior it Dies
Et Soles melius nitent.*

But we cannot meet. All that is left for me, is to use the liberty you allow me of offering a few hints upon these subjects by letter, not because you know them not, but because you love them. The hour is coming, when all impediments shall be removed—All distinctions shall cease that are founded upon sublunary things, and the earth and all its works shall be burnt up. Glorious day! May our souls be filled with the thought, and learn to estimate all things around us now, by the view in which they will appear to us then. Then it will be of small moment who was the Prince and who was the Beggar in this life—but who in their several situations sought, and loved, and feared, and honored the Lord. Alas! how many of the kings of the earth, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, will then say (in vain) to the mountains and the rocks, fall on us and hide us! In this world they are for the most part too busy to regard the commands of God, or too happy to seek his favor; they have their good things here, they please themselves for a while, and in a moment they go down to the grave: in that moment their thoughts perish, their schemes are left unfinished, they are torn from their possessions, and enter upon a new, an untried, an unchangeable, a never ending state of existence. Alas, is this all the world can afford! I congratulate you, my Lord, not because God has appointed you to appear in an elevated rank (this, abstracted from the opportunity it affords you of greater usefulness, would perhaps be a more proper subject for condolance) but that he has admitted you to those honors and privileges which come from him only, and which so few in the superior ranks of life think worthy of their attention. I doubt not but you are often affected with a sense of this distinguishing mercy. But though we know that we are debtors, great debtors to the grace of God, which alone has made us to differ, we know it but imperfectly at present. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, nor can we form a just conception of the misery from which we are redeemed; much less of the price paid for our redemption. How little do we know of the Redeemer's dignity, and of the unutterable distress he endured when his soul was made an offering for sin, and it pleased the Father to bruise him, that by his stripes we might be healed. These things will strike us quite in another manner when we view them in the light of eternity. Then, to return to the thought from which I have rambled, then and there I trust we shall meet to the highest advantage, and spend an everlasting day together in happiness and praise. With this thought I endeavor to comfort myself under the regret I sometimes feel that I can have so little intercourse with you in this life.

May the cheering contemplation of the hope set before us, support and animate us to improve the interval, and fill us with an holy ambition of shining as lights in the world, to the praise and glory of his grace who has called us out of darkness. Encompassed as we are with snares, temptations and infirmities, it is possible (by his promised assistance) to live in some good measure above the world while we are in it; above the influence of its cares, its smiles, or its frowns. Our conversation πολιτευμα, our citizenship is in heaven. We are not at home, but only resident here for a season, to fulfil an appointed service. And the Lord, whom we serve, has encouraged us to hope that he will guide us by his wisdom, strengthen us by his power, and comfort us with the light of his countenance, which is better than life. Every blessing we receive from him is a token of his favor, and a pledge of that far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, which he has reserved for us. O, to hear him say at last, Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord! will be a rich amends for all that we can lose, suffer or forbear, for his sake.

I subscribe myself, with great sincerity,

My Lord, &c.

M Y L O R D,

February — 1774.

THE first line of Horace's epistle to Augustus, when rightly applied, suggests a grand and cheering idea. As addressed by the Poet, nothing can be more blasphemous, idolatrous and absurd; but with what comfort and propriety may a Christian look up to him, to whom all power is committed in heaven and earth, and say, Cum tot sustineas et tanta negotia Solus! Surely a more weighty and comprehensive sentence never dropped from an uninspired pen. And how beautifully and expressively is it closed by the word Solus! The government is upon his shoulders, and though he is concealed by a veil of second causes, from common eyes, so that they can perceive only the means, instruments and contingencies by which he works, and therefore think he does nothing, yet in reality he does all, according to his own counsel and pleasure in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth.

Who can enumerate the Tot et tanta negotia, which are incessantly before his eye, adjusted by his wisdom, dependent on his will, and regulated by his power in his kingdoms of providence and grace? If we consider the heavens, the work of his fingers, the moon and the stars which he has ordained—If we call in the assistance of Astronomers and glasses, to help us in forming a conception of the number, distances, magnitudes and motions of the heavenly bodies; the more we search, the more we shall be confirmed, that these are but a portion of his ways — But he calls them all by their names, upholds them by his power, and without his continual energy they would rush into confusion, or sink into nothing. If we speak of intelligences, he is the life, the joy, the sun of all that are capable of happiness. Whatever may be signified by the thrones, principalities and powers in the world of light, they are all dependant upon his power and obedient to his command; it is equally true of angels as of men, that without him they can do nothing. The powers of darkness are likewise under his subjection and control. Though but little is said of them in scripture, we read enough to assure us that their number must be immensely great, and that their strength, subtlety and malice are such, as we may tremble to think of them as our enemies; and probably should, but for our strange insensibility to whatever does not fall under the cognizance of our outward senses. But he holds them all in a chain, so that they can do or attempt nothing but by his permission, and whatever he permits them to do (though they mean nothing less) has its appointed subserviency in accomplishing his designs.

But to come nearer home, and to speak of what seems more suited to our scanty apprehensions—still we may be lost in wonder—Before this blessed and only Potentate, all the nations of the earth are but as the dust upon the ballance and the small drop of a bucket—and might be thought (if compared pared with the immensity of his works) scarcely worthy of his notice. Yet here he presides, pervades, provides, protects and rules. In him his creatures live, move, and have their being—from him is their food and preservation. The eyes of all are upon him; what he gives they gather, and can gather no more; and at his word they sink into the dust—There is not a worm that crawls upon the ground, or a flower that grows in the pathless wilderness, or a shell upon the sea shore, but bears the impress of his wisdom, power and goodness. With respect to men he reigns with uncontrolled dominion over every kingdom, family and individual. Here we may be astonished at his wisdom, in employing Free Agents, the greater part of whom are his enemies, to accomplish his purposes. But, however reluctant, they all serve him. His patience likewise is wonderful. Multitudes, yea nearly our whole species, spend the life and strength which he affords them, and abuse all the bounties he heaps upon them in the ways of sin. His commands are disregarded, his name blasphemed, his mercy disdained, his power defied, yet still he spares. It is an eminent part of his government to restrain the depravity of human nature, and in various ways to check its effects, which if left to itself without his providential control, would presently make earth the very image of hell. For the vilest men are not suffered to perpetrate a thousandth part of the evil which their hearts would prompt them to. The earth, though lying in the wicked-one, is filled with the goodness of the Lord—He preserveth man and beast, sustains the young lion in the forest, feeds

the birds of the air which have neither store-house or barn, and adorns the insects and the flowers of the field with a beauty and elegance beyond all that can be found in the courts of kings.

Still more wonderful is his administration in his kingdom of grace. He is present with all his creatures, but in a peculiar manner with his own people. Each of these are monuments of a more illustrious display of power than that which spread abroad the heavens like a curtain and laid the foundations of the earth. For he finds them all in a state of rebellion and enmity, and makes them a willing people. And from the moment he reveals his love to them, he espouses their cause and takes all their concerns into his own hands. He is near and attentive to every one of them, as if there was only that one. This high and lofty One who inhabits eternity, before whom the Angels veil their faces, condescends to hold communion with those whom men despise, He sees not as man seeth—

Rides on a cloud disdainful by, a Sultan or a Czar, to manifest himself to an humble soul in a mud-walled cottage. He comforts them when in trouble, strengthens them when weak, makes their beds in sickness, revives them when fainting, upholds them when falling, and so seasonably and effectually manages for them, that though they are persecuted and tempted, though their enemies are many and mighty, nothing that they feel or fear is able to separate them from his love.

And all this He does Solus. All the abilities, powers and instincts that are found amongst creatures, are emanations from his fulness. All changes, successes, successes, disappointments—all that is memorable in the annals of history, all the risings and falls of empires, all the turns in human life, take place according to his plan. In vain men contrive and combine to accomplish their own counsels, unless they are parts of his counsel likewise—the efforts of their utmost strength and wisdom are crossed and reversed by the feeblest and most unthought of circumstances. But when he has a work to accomplish, and his time is come, however inadequate and weak the means he employs may seem to a carnal eye, the success is infallibly secured. For all things serve him, and are in his hands as clay in the hands of the potter. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints.

This is the God whom we adore. This is he who invites us to lean upon his almighty arm, and promises to guide us with his unerring eye. He says to you, My Lord, and even to me, Fear not, I am with thee; be not dismayed, I am thy God; I will strengthen thee, yea I will help thee, yea I will uphold thee, with the right-hand of my righteousness. Therefore while in the path of duty, and following his call, we may cheerfully pass on regardless of apparent difficulties, for the Lord whose we are, and who has taught us to make his glory our highest end, will go before us, and at his word crooked things become straight, light shines out of darkness, and mountains sink into plains. Faith may and must be exercised, experience must and will confirm what his word declares, that the heart is deceitful, and that man in his best estate is vanity. But his promises to them that fear him shall be confirmed likewise, and they shall find him, in all situations, a sun, a shield and an exceeding great reward.

I have lost another of my people. A Mother in our Israel. A person of much experience, eminent grace, wisdom and usefulness. She walked with God forty years. She was one of the Lord's poor, but her poverty was decent, sanctified and honorable. She lived respected, and her death is considered as a public loss. It is a great loss to me, I shall miss her advice and example, by which I have been often edified and animated. But Jesus still lives. Almost her last words were, The Lord is my portion, saith my soul.

I am, my Lord,

M Y L O R D,

F O R about six weeks past I have had occasion to spend several hours of almost every day, with the sick and the dying. These scenes are to a Minister like walking the Hospitals to a young Surgeon. The various cases which occur exemplify, illustrate and explain, with a commanding energy, many truths which may be learnt indeed at home, but cannot be so well understood, or their force so sensibly felt, without the advantage of experience and observation. As Physicians, besides that competent general knowlege of their profession which should be common to them all, have usually their several favorite branches of study, some applying themselves more to Botany, others to Chemistry, others to Anatomy. So Ministers, as their inclinations and gifts differ, are led more closely to consider some particular branch of the system of Divine Truth. Some are directed to state and defend the doctrines of the Gospel, some have a talent for elucidating difficult texts of scripture; some have a turn for explaining the prophetic parts, and so of the rest. For myself; if it be lawful to speak of myself, and so far as I can judge, Anatomy is my favorite branch, I mean the study of the human heart, with its workings and counter-workings, as it is differently affected in a state of nature or of grace, in the different seasons seasons of prosperity, adversity, conviction, temptation, sickness, and the approach of death. The Lord by sending me hither, provided me a good school for these purposes. I know not where I could have had a better, or affording a greater variety of characters in proportion to the number of people; and as they are mostly a poor people, and strangers to that address which is the result of education and converse with the world, there is a simplicity in what they say or do, which gives me a peculiar advantage in judging of their cases.

But I was about to speak of death. Though the grand evidence of those truths upon which our hopes are built arises from the authority of God speaking them in his word, and revealing them by his Spirit, to the awakened heart (for till the heart is awakened it is incapable of receiving this evidence) yet some of these truths are so mysterious, so utterly repugnant to the judgment of depraved nature, that through the remaining influence of unbelief and vain reasoning, the temptations of Satan, and the subtle arguments with which some men reputed wise, attack the foundations of our faith, the minds even of believers are sometimes capable of being shaken. I know no better corroborating evidence for the relief of the mind under such assaults than the testimony of dying persons, especially of such as have lived out of the noise of controversy, and who perhaps never heard a syllable of what has been started in these evil days, against the Deity of Christ, his atonement, and other important articles. Permit me, my Lord, to relate, upon this occasion, some things which exceedingly struck me in the conversation I had with a young woman whom I visited in her last illness about two years ago. She was a sober prudent person, of plain sense, could read her bible, but had read little beside; her knowledge of the world was nearly confined to the parish, for I suppose she was seldom if ever twelve miles from home in her life. She had known the gospel about seven years before the Lord visited her with a lingering consumption, which at length removed her to a better world. A few days before her death, I had been praying by her bedside, and in my prayer I thanked the Lord, that he gave her now to see that she had not followed cunningly devised fables! When I had finished she repeated that word, "No, she said, not cunningly devised fables, these are realities indeed, I feel their truth, I feel their comfort. O tell my friends, tell my acquaintance, tell enquiring souls, tell poor sinners, tell all the daughters of Jerufalem (alluding to Solom. Song, v. 16, from which she had just before desired me to preach her funeral) what Jesus has done for my soul. Tell them that now in the time of need, I find him my beloved and my friend, and as such I commend him to them." She then fixed her eyes stedfastly upon me, and proceeded as well as I can recollect as follows: "Sir, you are highly favored in being called to preach the Gospel. I have often heard you with pleasure; but give me leave to tell you, that I now see all you have said, or can say, is comparatively but little. Nor till you come into my situation, and have death and eternity full in your view, will it be possible for you

you to conceive the vast weight and importance of the truths you declare. Oh Sir, it is a serious thing to die, no words can express what is needful to support the soul, in the solemnity of a dying hour."

I believe it was the next day when I visited her again; after some discourse as usual, she said, with a remarkable vehemence of speech, are you sure I cannot be mistaken? I answered without hesitation, yes, I am sure—I am not afraid to say, my soul for your's that you are right. She paused a little and then replied, "You say true, I know I am right. I feel that my hope is fixed upon the rock of ages, I know in whom I have believed. Yet if you could see with my eyes you would not wonder at my question. But the approach of death presents a prospect, which is till then hidden from us, and which cannot be described." She said much more to the same purpose, and in all she spoke there was a dignity, weight, and evidence, which I suppose few professors of divinity when lecturing from the chair, have at any time equalled. We may well say with Elihu, Who teacheth like him? Many instances of the like kind I have met with here. I have a poor girl near me who looks like an Idiot, and her natural capacity is indeed very small; but the Lord has been pleased to make her acquainted alternately with great temptations, and proportionably great discoveries of his love and truth; sometimes when her heart is enlarged, I listen to her with astonishment. I think no books or ministers I ever met with, have given me such an impression

and understanding of what the Apostle stiles τα βαδνη του θεου, as I have upon some occasions received from her conversation.

But I am rambling again. My attendance upon the sick is not always equally comfortable, but could I learn aright it might be equally instructive. Some confirm the preciousness of a Savior to me, by the chearfulness with which, through faith in his name, they meet the king of terrors. Others no less confirm it, by the terror and reluctance they discover when they find they must die. For though there are too many who sadly slight the blessed Gospel while they are in health, yet in this place most are too far enlightened to be quite thoughtless about their souls, if they retain their senses in their last illness. Then, like the foolish virgins, they say, Give us of your oil: Then they are willing that ministers and professors should pray with them and speak to them. Through the Lord's goodness several whom I have visited in these circumstances, have afforded me good hope; they have been savingly changed by his blessing upon what has passed at the eleventh hour. I have seen a marvellous and blessed change take place in their language, views and tempers, in a few days. I now visit a young person who is cut short in her 19th year by a consumption, and I think cannot live many days. I found her very ignorant and insensible, and she remained so a good while, but of late I hope her heart is touched—She feels her lost state, she seems to have some right desires, she begins to pray, and in such a manner as I cannot but hope the Lord is teaching her, and will reveal himself himself to her before she departs—but it is sometimes otherwise. I saw a young woman die last week; I had been often with her, but the night she was removed she could only say, O, I cannot live, I cannot live! She repeated this mournful complaint as long as she could speak, for as the vital powers were more oppressed, her voice was changed into groans; her groans grew fainter and fainter, and in about a quarter of an hour after she had done speaking she expired. Poor thing, I thought, as I stood by her bedside, if you were a Duchess, in this situation, what could the world do for you now! I thought likewise, how many things are there, that now give us pleasure or pain, and assume a mighty importance in our view, which, in a dying hour, will be no more to us than the clouds which fly unnoticed over our heads. Then the truth of our Lord's aphorism will be seen, felt and acknowledged, One thing is needful. And we shall be ready to apply Grotius's dying confession to (alas!) a great part of our lives—Ab vitam perdidit, nihil agendo laboriose.

Your Lordship allows me to send unpremeditated letters—I need not assure you this is one.

I am, my Lord,

Your Lordship's, &c.

M Y L O R D,

WHAT a mercy is it to be separated in spirit, conversation and interest from the world that knows not God! where all are alike by nature. Grace makes a happy and unspeakable difference. Believers were once under the same influence of that spirit who still worketh in the children of disobedience, pursuing different paths, but all equally remote from truth and peace. Some hatching cockatrice eggs, others weaving spiders webs. These two general heads of mischief and vanity, include all the schemes, aims and atchievements of which man is capable, till God is pleased to visit the heart with his grace. The busy part of mankind are employed in multiplying evils and miseries; the more retired, speculative and curious are amusing themselves with what will hereafter appear as unsubstantial, unstable and useless as a cobweb. Death will soon sweep away all that the philosophers, the virtuosi, the mathematicians, the antiquarians and other learned triflers are now weaving with so much self-applauded address. Nor will the fine spun dresses, in which the moralist and the self-righteous clothe themselves, be of more advantage to them either for ornament or defence than the produce of a spider. But it is given to a few to know their present state and future destination—
These build upon the immoveable rock of ages, for

for eternity. These are trees springing from a living root, and bear the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ to the glory and praise of God. These only are awake while the rest of the world are in a sleep, indulging in vain dreams from which likewise they will shortly awake; but O, with what consternation, when they shall find themselves irrecoverably divorced from all their delusive attachments, and compelled to appear before that God to whom they have lived strangers, and to whom they must give an account. O for a thousand tongues to proclaim in the ears of thoughtless mortals, that important aphorism of our Lord, One thing is needful. Yet a thousand tongues would be and are employed in vain, unless so far as the Lord is pleased to send the watchman's warning, by the power and agency of his own Spirit. I think the Poet tells us that Cassandra had the gift of truly foretelling future events, but she was afterwards laid under a painful embarrassment, that nobody should believe her words. Such, with respect to the bulk of their auditories, is the lot of Gospel Ministers; they are enlightened to see, and sent forth to declare, the awful consequences of sin; but alas, how few believe their report. To illustrate our grief and disappointment, I sometimes suppose there was a dangerous water in the way of travellers, over which there is a bridge, which those who can be prevailed upon may pass with safety. By the side of this bridge watchmen are placed, to warn passengers of the danger of the waters, to assure them that all who attempt to go through them inevitably perish, to invite, intreat and beseech them, if they value their lives, to cross the bridge. Methinks this should be an easy task. Yet if we should see in fact the greater part stopping their ears to the friendly importunity, many so much offended by it, as to account the watchman's care impertinent, and only deserving of scorn and ill-treatment, hardly one in fifty betaking themselves to the friendly bridge, the rest eagerly plunging into the waters, from which none return, as if they were determined to try who should be drowned first. This spectacle would be no unfit emblem of the reception the gospel meets with from a blinded world. The Ministers are rejected, opposed, vilified; they are accounted troublers of the world, because they dare not, cannot stand silent, while sinners are perishing before their eyes; and if in the course of many sermons they can prevail but on one soul to take timely warning, and to seek to Jesus, who is the way, the truth and the life, they may account it a mercy and an honor, sufficient to overballance all the labor and reproaches they are called to endure. From the most they must expect no better reception than the Jews gave to Jeremiah, who told the Prophet to his face, As to the word thou hast spoken to us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken to thee at all, but we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth. Surely, if the Lord has given us any sense of the worth of our souls, any compassion towards them, this must be a painful exercise, and experience must teach us something of the meaning of Jeremiah's pathetic exclamation, O that my head were waters, and mine eyes fountains of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughters of my people. It is our duty to be thus affected. Our relief lies in the wisdom and sovereignty of God. He reveals his salvation to whom he pleases, for the most part to babes; from the bulk of the wise and the prudent it is hidden. Thus it hath pleased him, and therefore it must be right. Yea, he will one day condescend to justify the propriety and equity of his proceedings to his creatures; then every mouth will be stopped, and none will be able to reply against their judge. Light is come into the world, but men prefer darkness. They hate the light, resist it, and rebel against it. It is true all do so, and therefore if all were to perish under the condemnation, their ruin would be their own act. It is of grace that any are saved, and in the distribution of that grace, he does what he will with his own. A right which most are ready enough to claim in their own concerns, though they are so unwilling to allow it to the Lord of all. Many perplexing and acrimonious disputes have been started upon this subject; but the redeemed of the Lord are called not to dispute, but to admire and rejoice; to love, adore and obey. To know that he loved us, and gave himself for us, is the constraining argument and motive to love him, and surrender ourselves to him, to consider ourselves as no longer our own, but to devote ourselves, with every faculty, power and talent, to his service and glory. He deserves our all, for he parted with all for us. He made himself poor—

He endured shame, torture, death and the curse for us, that we through him might inherit everlasting life. Ah, the hardness of my heart, that I am no more affected, astonished, overpowered with this thought.

I am, my Lord,

Your Lordship's most obedient,

and obliged Servant.

MY LORD,

I Have been pondering a good while, for a subject, and at last I begin without one, hoping that (as it has often happened) while I am writing one line, something will occur to fill up another. Indeed I have an inexhaustible fund at hand, but it is to me often like a prize in the hand of a fool, I want skill to improve it. O for a warm, a suitable, a seasonable train of thought, that might enliven my own heart, and not be unworthy your Lordship's perusal. Methinks the Poets can have but cold comfort, when they invoke a fabled muse; but we have a warrant, a right to look up for the influence of the holy Spirit, who ordains strength for us, and has promised to work in us. What a comfort, what an honor is this, that worms have liberty to look up to God, and that He, the high and holy One who inhabiteth eternity, is pleased to look down upon us, to maintain our peace, to supply our wants, to guide us with his eye, and to inspire us with wisdom and grace, suitable to our occasions. They who profess to know something of this intercourse, and to depend upon it, are by the world accounted enthusiasts, who know not what they mean, or perhaps hypocrites, who pretend to what they have not, in order to cover some base designs—But we have reason to bear their reproaches with patience. Could the miser say

————— Populus me sibilat, at mihi plaudo
Ipsæ domi, simul ac nummos contemplor in arca.

Well then, may the believer say, Let them laugh, let them rage, let them, if they please, point at me for a fool as I walk the streets, if I do but take up the Bible, or run over in my mind the inventory of the blessings with which the Lord has enriched me, I have sufficient amends. Jesus is mine; in him I have wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, an interest in all the promises and in all the perfections of God; he will guide me by his counsel, support me by his power, comfort me with his presence, while I am here, and afterwards, when flesh and heart fail, he will receive me to his glory.

Let them say what they will, they shall not dispute or laugh us out of our spiritual senses. If all the blind men in the kingdom should endeavor to bear me down, that the Sun is not bright, or that the Rainbow has no colors, I would still believe my own eyes. I have seen them both, they have not; I cannot prove to their satisfaction what I assert, because they are destitute of sight the necessary medium; yet their exceptions produce no uncertainty in my mind; they would not; they could not hesitate a moment if they were not blind. Just so, they who have been taught of God, who have tasted that the Lord is gracious, have an experimental perception of the truth, which renders them proof against all the sophistry of Infidels. I am persuaded we have many plain people here, who if a wise man of the world was to suggest that the Bible is a human invention, would be quite at a loss how to answer him, by arguments drawn from external evidences; yet they have found such effects from this blessed book, that they would be no more moved by the insinuation, than if they were told that a cunning-man or set of men, invented the Sun and placed it in the firmament. So if a wise Socinian was to tell them that the Savior was only a man like themselves, they would conceive just such an opinion of his skill in divinity, as a philosopher would do of a clown's skill in astronomy, who should affirm that the Sun was no bigger than a cart wheel.

It remains therefore a truth, in defiance of all the cavils of the ignorant, that the holy Spirit does influence the hearts of all the children of God, or in other words, they are inspired, not with new revelations, but with grace and wisdom to understand; apply and feed upon the great things already revealed in the scriptures, without which the scriptures are as useless as spectacles to the blind. Were it not so, when we become acquainted with the poverty, ignorance and wickedness of our hearts, we must sit down in utter despair of being ever able to think a good thought, to offer a single petition aright in prayer, or to take one safe step in the path of life. But now we may be content with our proper weakness, since the power and spirit of Christ are engaged to rest upon us; and while we are preserved in a simple dependance upon this help, though unable of ourselves to do any thing, thing, we shall find an ability to do every thing that our circumstances and duty call for. What is weaker than a worm? Yet the Lord's worms shall, in his strength, thresh the mountains, and make the hills as chaff. But this life of faith, this living and acting by a power above our own, is an inexplicable mystery, till experience makes it plain. I have often wondered that St. Paul has obtained so much quarter at the hands of some people, as to pass with them for a man of sense. For surely the greatest part of his writings, must be to the last degree absurd and unintelligible upon their principles. How many contradictions must they find, for instance, if they give any attention to what they read, in that one passage, Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me.

And as believers are thus inspired by the holy Spirit, who furnishes them with desires, motives and abilities, to perform what is agreeable to his will—so I apprehend, that they who live without God in the world, whom the Apostle stiles sensual, not having the spirit, are in a greater or less degree, ad captum recipientis, under what I may call a black inspiration. After making the best allowances I can, both for the extent of human genius, and the deplorable evil of the human heart, I cannot suppose that one half of the wicked wit, of which some persons are so proud, is properly their own. Perhaps such a one as Voltaire, would neither have written, or have been read or admired so much, if he had not been the Amanuensis of an abler hand in his own way. Satan is always near, when the heart is disposed to receive him, and the Lord withdraws his restraints, to heighten the sinners ability of sinning with an eclat, and assisting him with such strokes of blasphemy, malice and falsehood, as perhaps he could not otherwise have attained. Therefore, I do not wonder that they are clever and smart, that they raise a laugh, and are received with applause among those who are like minded with themselves. But unless the Lord is pleased to grant them repentance, (though it is rather to be feared, some of them are given up to judicial hardness of heart) how much better would it have been for them, had they been born Idiots or Lunatics, than to be distinguished as the willing, industrious and successful instruments of the powers of darkness, in beguiling, perverting and ruining the souls of men. Alas, what are parts and talents, or any distinctions which give pre-eminence in life, unless they are sanctified by the grace of God, and directed to the accomplishment of his will and glory. From the expression, Bind them in bundles and burn them, I have been led to think, that the deceivers and the deceived, they who have prostituted their gifts or influence to encourage others in sin, and they who have perished by their means, may in another world have some peculiar and inseparable connection, and spend an eternity in fruitless lamentations; that ever they were connected here.

Your Lordship, I doubt not, feels the force of that line,

O to grace how great a debtor—

Had not the Lord separated you for himself—
Your rank, your abilities, your influence, which now you chiefly value, as enlarging your opportunities of usefulness, might, nay certainly would have been diverted into the opposite channel.

I am, my Lord,

Your Lordship's,

April 20, 1774.

Most obedient and obliged Servant,

LETTER XVI.

MY LORD,

I HAVE not very lately had recourse to the expedient of descanting upon a text, but I believe it the best method I can take to avoid ringing changes upon a few obvious topics, which I suppose uniformly present themselves to my mind, when I am about to write to your Lordship. Just now that sweet expression of David occurred to my thoughts, The Lord is my Shepherd! Permit me, without plan or premeditation, to make a few observations upon it; and may your Lordship feel the peace, the confidence, the blessedness, which a believing application of the words is suited to inspire.

The Socinians and others, in their unhappy labored attempts to darken the principal glory and foundation comfort of the Gospel, employ their critical sophistry against those texts which expressly and doctrinally declare the Redeemer's character, and affect to triumph, if in any manuscript or ancient version they can find a variation from the received copies, which seems to favor their cause. But we may venture to wave the authority of every disputed or disputable text, and maintain the truth against their cavils, from the current language and tenor of the whole scripture. David's words, in Psal. xxiii. are alone a decisive proof that Jesus is Jehovah. If they will but allow two things, which I think they cannot deny—1. That our Savior

assumes to himself the character of the Shepherd of his people—and 2. That he did not come into the world to abridge those advantages which the servants of God enjoyed before his incarnation. Upon these premisses, which cannot be gainsaid without setting aside the whole New Testament, the conclusion is undeniable: for if Jehovah was David's Shepherd, unless Jesus be Jehovah, we who live under the gospel have an unspeakable disadvantage, in being entrusted to the care of one, who, according to the Socinians, is a mere man; and upon the Arian scheme, is at the most a creature, and infinitely short of possessing those perfections which David contemplated in his Shepherd. He had a Shepherd whose wisdom and power were infinite, and might therefore warrantably conclude he should not want, and need not fear. And we also may conclude the same, if our Shepherd be the LORD or Jehovah, but not otherwise. Besides, the very nature of the Shepherd's office respecting the state of such frail creatures as we are, requires those attributes for the due discharge of it, which are incommunicably divine. He must intimately know every individual of the flock—His eye must be upon them every one, and his ear open to their prayers, and his arm stretched out for their relief, in all places and in all ages—Every thought of every heart must be open to his view, and his wisdom must penetrate and his arm control and over-rule all the hidden and complicated machinations of the powers of darkness—He must have the administration of universal providence over all the nations, families and persons upon earth, or he could not effectually manage for those who put their trust in him, in that immense variety of cases and circumstances in which they are found. Reason as well as scripture may convince us, that he who gathereth the outcasts of Israel, who healeth the broken in heart, who upholdeth all that fall, raiseth up all that are bowed down, and upon whom the eyes of all wait for their support, can be no other than he who telleth the number of the stars and calleth them all by their names, who is great in power, and whose understanding is infinite. To this purpose, likewise, the prophet Isaiah describes this mighty Shepherd, ch. xl. 9—17. both as to his person and office.

But is not this indeed the great mystery of Godliness! How just is the Apostle's observation, that no man can say Jesus Christ is Lord but by the Holy Ghost! How astonishing the thought—that the Maker of heaven and earth, the Holy One of Israel, before whose presence the earth shook, the heavens dropped, when he displayed a faint emblem of his majesty upon Sinai, should afterwards appear in the form of a servant, and hang upon a cross, the sport and scorn of wicked men. I cannot wonder that to the wise men of the world this appears absurd, unreasonable and impossible! Yet to right reason, to reason enlightened and sanctified, however amazing the proposition be, yet it appears true and necessary—upon a supposition that a holy God is pleased to pardon sinners, in a way suited to display the awful glories of his justice. The same arguments which prove the blood of bulls and goats insufficient to take away sin, will conclude against the utmost doings or sufferings of men or angels. The Redeemer

Redeemer of sinners must be mighty—He must have a personal dignity to stamp such a value upon his undertakings as that thereby God may appear just as well as merciful, in justifying the ungodly for his sake. And he must be all-sufficient to bless, and almighty to protect those who come unto him for safety and life.

Such a one is our Shepherd. This is he of whom we through grace are enabled to say, we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture. We are his by every tie and right; he made us, he redeemed us, he reclaimed us from the hand of our enemies, and we are his by our own voluntary surrender of ourselves; for though we once slighted, despised and opposed him, he made us willing in the day of his power. He knocked at the door of our hearts, but we (at least I) barred and fastened it against him as much and as long as possible. But when he revealed his love, we could stand out no longer. Like sheep we are weak, destitute, defenceless, prone to wander, unable to return, and always surrounded with wolves. But all is made up in the fulness, ability, wisdom, compassion, care and faithfulness of our great Shepherd. He guides, protects, feeds, heals and restores, and will be our guide and our God even until death. Then he will meet us, receive us and present us unto himself, and we shall be near him, and like him, and with him for ever.

Ah, my Lord, what a subject is this! I trust it is the joy of your heart. Placed as you are by his hand in a superior rank, you see and feel that the highest honors, and the most important concern-

ments that terminate with the present life, are trivial as the sports of children, in comparison with the views and the privileges you derive from the glorious gospel. And your situation in life renders the grace bestowed upon you the more conspicuous and distinguishing. I have somewhere met with a similar reflection of Henry the Fourth of France to this purpose, that though many came into the world the same day with him, he was probably the only one among them that was born to be a King. Your Lordship is acquainted with many, who if not born on the same day with you, were born to titles, estates and honors. But how few of them were born to the honor of making a public and consistent profession of the glorious gospel. The hour is coming, when all honors and possessions but this which cometh of God only, will be eclipsed and vanish, and like the baseless fabric of a vision leave not a wreck behind. How miserable will they then be, who must leave their all! What a mortifying thought does Horace put in the way of those who disdain to read the scripture—

Linquenda tellus, et domus et placens.

Uxor : neque harum, quas colis, arborum:

Te, præter invisas cupressos,

But grace and faith can make the lowest state of life supportable, and make a dismissal from the highest desirable. Of the former I have many living proofs and witnesses around me: Your Lordship I trust will have sweet experience of the latter, when, after having fulfilled the will of God in your generation, you shall be called (I hope in some yet distant day) to enter into your Master's joy. In the mean time, how valuable are life, talents, influence and opportunities of every kind, if we are enabled to improve and lay out all for him, who has thus loved us, thus provided for us. As to myself, I would hope there are few who have so clear a sense of their obligations to him, who make such unfuitable and languid returns as I do. I think I have a desire to serve him better; but alas, evil is present with me. Surely I shall feel something like shame and regret for my coldness, even in heaven—for I find I am never happier than when I am most ashamed of myself upon this account, here.

I am, my Lord, &c.

LETTER XVII.

MY LORD,

HOW wonderful is the patience of God towards sinful men! In him they live and move and have their being; and if he were to withdraw his support for a single moment, they must perish. He maintains their lives, guards their persons, supplies their wants, while they employ the powers and faculties they receive from him, in a settled course of opposition to his will. They trample upon his laws, affront his government and despise his grace; yet still he spares. To silence all his adversaries in a moment, would require no extraordinary exertion of his power; but his forbearance towards them manifests his glory, and gives us cause to say, Who is a God like unto thee!

Sometimes, however, there are striking instances of his displeasure against sin. When such events take place immediately upon a public and premeditated contempt, offered to Him that sitteth in the heavens; I own they remind me of the danger of standing, if I may so speak, in the Lord's way; for though his long-suffering is astonishing, and many dare him to his face daily with seeming impunity, yet he sometimes strikes an awful and unexpected blow, and gives an illustration of that solemn word, Who ever hardened himself against the Lord and prospered? But who am I to make this observation? I ought to do it with the deepest humiliation, remembering that I once stood (according to my years and ability) in the foremost rank of his avowed opposers, and with a determined and unwearied enmity renounced, defied and blasphemed him. But he will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and therefore I was spared and reserved to speak of his goodness.

Josephus, when speaking of the death of Herod Agrippa, ascribes it to a natural cause, and says, he was seized with excruciating pains in his bowels; but Luke informs us of the true cause. An Angel of the Lord smote him. Had we a modern history, written by an inspired pen, we should probably often be reminded of such an interposition where we are not ordinarily aware of it. For though the springs of actions and events are concealed from us for the most part, and vain men carry on their schemes with confidence, as though the Lord had forsaken the earth, yet they are under his eye and control, and faith in some measure, instructed by the specimens of his government, recorded in the scripture, can trace and admire his hand, and can see how he takes the wise in their own craftiness, stains the pride of human glory, and that when sinners speak proudly he is above them, and makes every thing bend or break before him.

While we lament the growth and pernicious effects of Infidelity, and see how wicked men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived; what gratitude should fill our hearts to him, who has been pleased to call us out of the horrid darkness in which multitudes are bewildered

and lost, into the glorious light of his gospel? Faint are our warmest conceptions of this mercy. In order to understand it fully, we should have a full and adequate sense of the evil from which we are delivered, the glory to which we are called, and especially of the astonishing means to which we owe our life and hope, the humiliation, sufferings and death of the Son of God. But our views of these points, while in our present state, are and must be exceedingly weak and disproportionate. We know them but in part, we see them δι' εσποπίας by reflection, rather the images than the things themselves, and though they are faithfully represented in the mirror of God's word, to us they appear indistinct, because we see them through a gross medium of ignorance and unbelief. Hereafter every veil shall be removed; we shall know, in another manner than we do now, the unspeakable evil of sin, and the insupportable dreadfulness of God's displeasure against it, when we see the world in flames, and hear the final sentence denounced upon the ungodly. We shall have far other thoughts of Jesus when we see him as he is, and shall then be able to make a more affecting estimate of the love which moved him to be made a substitute and a curse for us, and we shall then know what great things God has prepared for them that love him. Then with transport we shall adopt the Queen of Sheba's language, It was a true report we heard in yonder dark world, but behold the half, the thousandth part, was not told us! In the mean time may such conceptions as we are enabled to form of these great truths fill our hearts, and be mingled with

with all our thoughts and all our concerns. May the Lord, by faith, give us an abiding evidence of the reality and importance of the things which cannot yet be seen ; so shall we be enabled to live above the world while we are in it, uninfluenced either by its blandishments or its frowns, and with a noble simplicity and singularity, avow and maintain the cause of God in truth, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. He whom we serve is able to support and protect us, and he well deserves at our hands that we should be willing to endure, for his sake, much more than he will ever permit us to be exercised with. The believers call, duty and privilege, is beautifully and forcibly set forth in Milton's character of Abdiel, at the end of the fifth Book—

Among the faithless, faithful only he :
 Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
 Unshaken, uneduc'd, unterrify'd,
 His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal ;
 Nor number, nor example, with him wrought
 To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind
 Tho' single—————

Methinks your Lordship's situation, particularly resembles that in which the Poet has placed Abdiel. You are not indeed called to serve God quite alone. But amongst those of your own rank, and with whom the station in which he has placed you necessitates you to converse, how few are there, who can understand, second, or approve, the principles upon which you act, or easily bear a conduct which must

must impress conviction, or reflect dishonour upon themselves! But you are not alone; the Lord's people (many of whom you will not know till you meet them in glory) are helping you here with their prayers, his angels are commissioned to guard and guide your steps—Yea, the Lord himself fixes his eye of mercy upon your private and your public path, and is near you at your right hand, that you may not be moved! That he may comfort you with the light of his countenance, and uphold you with the arm of his power, is my frequent prayer.

I am, my Lord, &c.

M Y L O R D,

Jan. 20, 1775.

WE have entered upon another year!—So have thousands, perhaps millions, who will not see it close! an alarming thought to the worldling, at least it should be so. I have an imperfect remembrance of an account I read when I was a boy, of an ice palace, built one winter at Petersburg; the walls, the roof, the floors, the furniture, were all of ice, but finished with taste, and every thing that might be expected in a royal palace was to be found there; the ice while in the state of water being previously coloured, so that to the eye all seemed formed of the proper materials, but all was cold, useless, and transient. Had the frost continued till now, the palace might have been standing, but with the returning spring it melted away like the baseless fabrick of a vision. Methinks there should have been one stone in the building, to have retained the inscription Sic transit gloria mundi, for no contrivance could exhibit a fitter illustration of the vanity of human life. Men build and plan as if their work were to endure for ever, but the wind passes over them and they are gone. In the midst of all their preparations, or at farthest, when they think they have just compleated their designs, their breath goeth forth, they return to their earth, in that very day their thoughts perish.

How many sleep who kept the world awake!

Yct

Yet this ice-house had something of a leisurely dissolution, though when it began to decay all the art of man was unable to prop it; but often death comes hastily, and like the springing of a mine, destroys to the very foundations without previous notice. Then all we have been concerned in here, (all but the consequences of our conduct, which will abide to eternity) will be no more to us than the remembrance of a dream. This truth is too plain to be denied, but the greater part of mankind act as if they were convinced it was false; they spend their days in vanity, and in a moment they go down to the grave. What cause of thankfulness have they who are delivered from this delusion, and who by the knowledge of the glorious gospel, have learned their true state and end, are saved from the love of the present world, from the heart-distressing fear of death, and know that if their earthly house were dissolved, like the ice-palace, they have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Yet even these are much concerned to realize the brevity and uncertainty of their present state, that they may be stimulated to make the most and the best of it, to redeem their time, and manage their precarious opportunities so, as may most tend to the praise and glory of him, who has called them out of darkness into marvellous light. Why should any that have tasted that the Lord is gracious, wish to live another day, but that they may have the honor to be fellow-workers with him, instrumental in promoting his designs, and of laying themselves out to the utmost of their abilities and influence in his service! To enjoy a sense of his loving kindness, ness, and to have the light of his countenance lifted up upon our souls, is indeed, respecting ourselves, the best part of life, yea better than life itself; but this we shall have to unspeakably greater advantage, when we have finished our course, and shall be wholly freed from the body of sin. And therefore, the great desirable while here, seems to be Grace, that we may serve him and suffer for him in the world. Though our first wish immediately upon our own accounts might be, to depart and be with Jesus, which is πολλω μαλλον κρεισσον, yet a lively thought of our immense obligations to his redeeming love, may reconcile us to a much longer continuance here, if we may by any means be subservient to diffuse the glory of his name, and the blessings of his salvation, which is God's great and principal end in preserving the world itself. When historians and politicians descant upon the rise and fall of empires, with all their professed sagacity, in tracing the connection between causes and effects, they are totally unacquainted with the great master wheel which manages the whole movement; that is, the Lord's design in favor of his church and kingdom; to this every event is subordinate, to this every interfering interest must stoop. How easily might this position be proved, by reviewing the history of the period about the Reformation. Whether Dr. Robertson considers things in this light, in his history of Charles the Vth, I know not, as I have not seen his books, but if not, however elaborate his performance may be in other respects, I must venture to say, it is essentially defective, and cannot give that light and pleasure

to a spiritual reader of which the subject is capable. And I doubt not but some who are yet unborn, will hereafter clearly see and remark, that the present unhappy disputes between Great Britain and America, with their consequences, whatever they may be, are part of a series of events, of which the extension and interests of the church of Christ, were the principal final causes. In a word, that Jesus may be known, trusted and adored, and sinners by the power of his gospel be rescued from sin and Satan, is comparatively the To εἶναι—the one great business for the sake of which the succession of day and night, summer and winter is still maintained, and when the plan of redemption is consummated, sin, which now almost fills the earth, will then set it on fire, and the united interest of all the rest of mankind, when detached from that of the people of God, will not plead for its preservation a single day. In this view I congratulate your Lordship, that however your best endeavors to serve the temporal interests of the nation may fall short of your wishes, yet so far as your situation gives you opportunity of supporting the gospel cause, and facilitating its progress, you have a prospect both of a more certain, and more important success. For instance, it was, under God, your Lordship's favor and influence, that brought me into the ministry. And though I be nothing, yet He who put it into your heart to patronize me, has been pleased not to suffer, what you then did for his sake, to be wholly in vain. He has been pleased in a course of years, by so unworthy an instrument as I am, to awaken a number of persons, who were at that time dead in

in trespasses and sins; but now some of them are pressing on to the prize of their high calling in Christ Jesus, and some of them are already before the throne. Should I suggest in some companies, that the conversion of a hundred sinners (more or less) to God, is an event of more real importance, than the temporal prosperity of the greatest nation upon earth; I should be charged with ignorance and arrogance; but your Lordship is skilled in scriptural arithmetic; which alone can teach us to estimate the value of souls, and will agree with me that one soul is worth more than the whole world, on account of its redemption price, its vast capacities and its duration. Should we suppose a nation to consist of forty millions, the whole and each individual to enjoy as much good as this life can afford, without abatement, for a term of 50 years each—all this good, or an equal quantity, might be exhausted by a single person in two thousand million of years; which would be but a moment, in comparison of the eternity which would still follow—And if this good were merely temporal good, the whole aggregate of it would be evil and misery, if compared with that happiness in God, of which only they who are made partakers of a divine life are capable. On the other hand, were a whole nation to be destroyed by such accumulated miseries as attended the siege of Jerusalem, the sum total of these calamities, would be but trifling, if set in competition with what every single person that dies in sin, has to expect, when the sentence of everlasting destruction from the presence presence of the Lord and the glory of his power shall be executed.

What an unexpected round have my thoughts taken since I set out from the ice-palace. It is time to relieve your Lordship, and to subscribe myself,

My Lord, &c.

M Y L O R D,

I ASSENT to our Lord's declaration, Without me ye can do nothing; not only upon the authority of the speaker, but from the same irresistible and experimental evidence, as if he had told me, that I cannot make the sun to shine, or change the course of the seasons. Though my pen and my tongue sometimes move freely, yet the total incapacity and stagnation of thought I labor under at other times, convinces me, that in myself I have not sufficiency to think a good thought, and I believe the case would be the same, if that little measure of knowledge and abilities, which I am too prone to look upon as my own, were a thousand times greater than it is. For every new service I stand in need of a new supply, and can bring forth nothing of my supposed store into actual exercise, but by his immediate assistance. His gracious influence is that to those who are best furnished with gifts, which the water is to the mill, or the wind to the ship, without which the whole apparatus is motionless and useless. I apprehend that we lose much of the comfort which might arise from a sense of our continual dependance upon him, and of course fall short of acknowledging, as we ought, what we receive from him, by mistaking the manner of his operation. Perhaps we take it too much for granted, that communications from himself, must bear some

some kind of sensible impression that they are his, and therefore are ready to give our own industry or ingenuity credit, for those performances in which we can perceive no such impression; yet it is very possible that we may be under his influence when we are least aware; and though what we say, or write, or do, may seem no way extraordinary, yet that we should be led to such a particular turn of thought at one time rather than at another, has, in my own concerns, often appeared to me remarkable, from the circumstances which have attended, or the consequences which have followed. How often in the choice of a text, or in the course of a sermon, or in a letter to a friend, have I been led to speak a word in season; and what I have expressed at large, and in general, has been so exactly suited to some case which I was utterly unacquainted with, that I could hardly have hit it so well, had I been previously informed of it. Some instances of this kind have been so striking as hardly to admit a doubt of superior agency. And, indeed, if believers in Jesus, however unworthy in themselves, are the temples of the Holy Ghost; if the Lord lives, dwells and walks in them; if he is their life and their light; if he has promised to guide them with his eye, and to work in them to will and to do of his own good pleasure; methinks what I have mentioned, and more, may be reasonably expected. That line in the hymn,

Help I ev'ry moment need,

is not an hyperbolical expression, but strictly and literally true, not only in great emergencies, but in our smoother hours, and most familiar paths. This gracious assistance is afforded in a way imperceptible to ourselves, to hide pride from us, and to prevent us from being indolent and careless with respect to the use of appointed means. And it would be likewise more abundantly, and perhaps more sensibly afforded, were our spirits more simple in waiting upon the Lord. But, alas, a divided heart, an undue attachment to some temporal object, sadly deadens our spirits (I speak for myself) and grieves the Lord's Spirit; so that we walk in darkness and at a distance, and though called to great privileges live far below them. But methinks the thought of him who is always near, and upon whom we do and must incessantly depend, should suggest a powerful motive for the closest attention to his revealed will, and the most punctual compliance with it. For so far as the Lord withdraws we become as blind men, and with the clearest light, and upon the plainest ground, we are liable, or rather sure, to stumble at every step.

Though there is a principle of consciousness, and a determination of the will, sufficient to denominate our thoughts and performances our own, yet I believe mankind in general, are more under an invisible agency than they apprehend. The Lord, immediately from himself, and perhaps by the ministry of his holy Angels, guides, prompts, restrains or warns his people. So there undoubtedly is what I may call a black inspiration, the influence of the evil spirits who work in the hearts of the disobedient, and not only excite their wills, but assist their faculties, and qualify as well as incline them to be more assiduously wicked, and more extensively mischievous, than they could be of themselves. I consider Voltaire, for instance, and many writers of the same stamp, to be little more than secretaries and amanuenses of one who has unspeakably more wit and adroitness in promoting infidelity and immorality, than they of themselves can justly pretend to. They have, for a while, the credit (if I may so call it) of the fund from whence they draw; but the world little imagines who is the real and original author of that philosophy and poetry, of those fine turns and sprightly inventions, which are so generally admired. Perhaps many, now applauded for their genius, would have been comparatively dolts, had they not been engaged in a cause which Satan has so much interest in supporting.

But to return to the more pleasing subject.— How great and honorable is the privilege of a true believer! That he has neither wisdom or strength in himself is no disadvantage, for he is connected with infinite wisdom, and almighty power. Though weak as a worm, his arms are strengthened by the mighty God of Jacob, and all things become possible, yea easy to him, that occur within the compass of his proper duty and calling. The Lord whom he serves, engages to proportion his strength to his day, whether it be a day of service or of suffering. And though he be fallible and short-sighted, exceeding liable to mistake and imposition, yet, while he retains a sense that he is so, and with the simplicity of a child asks counsel and direction of the Lord, he seldom takes a wrong step, at least not in matters of consequence; and even his inadver-

inadvertencies are over-ruled for good. If he forgets his true state, and thinks himself to be something, he presently finds he is indeed nothing. But if he is content to be nothing, and to have nothing, he is sure to find a seasonable and abundant communication of all that he wants. Thus he lives like Israel in the wilderness, upon mere bounty; but then it is a bounty unchangeable, unwearied, inexhaustible and all-sufficient. Moses, when speaking of the methods the Lord took to humble Israel, mentions his feeding them with manna, as one method. I could not understand this for a time. I thought they were rather in danger of being proud, when they saw themselves provided for in such an extraordinary way—But the manna would not keep; they could not hoard it up, and were therefore in a state of absolute dependance from day to day: this appointment was well suited to humble them.—Thus it is with us in spirituals. We should be better pleased, perhaps, to be set up with a stock, or sufficiency at once—Such an inherent portion of wisdom and power, as we might depend upon, at least for common occasions, without being constrained by a sense of indigence, to have continual recourse to the Lord for every thing we want. But his way is best. His own glory is most displayed, and our safety best secured, by keeping us quite poor and empty in ourselves, and supplying us from one minute to another, according to our need. This, if any thing, will prevent boasting, and keep a sense of gratitude awake in our hearts. This is well adapted to quicken us to prayer, and furnishes us with a thousand occasions for praise, which would otherwise escape our notice.

But who or what are we, that the Most High should thus notice us! Should visit us every morning, and water us every moment. It is an astonishing thought, that God should thus dwell with men! That he, before whom the mightiest earthly potentates are less than nothing and vanity, should thus stoop and accommodate himself to the situation, wants and capacities of the weakest, meanest and poorest of his children! But so it hath pleased him. He seeth not as man seeth.

I am, my Lord, &c.

LETTER XX.

MY LORD,

I HAVE no apt preface or introduction at hand, and as I have made it almost a rule not to study for what I should offer your Lordship; I therefore beg leave to begin abruptly. It is the future promised privilege of believers in Jesus, that they shall be as the Angels; and there is a sense in which we should endeavor to be as the Angels now. This is intimated to us where we are taught to pray, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. I have sometimes amused myself with supposing an Angel should be appointed to reside awhile upon earth, in a human body; not in sinful flesh like ours, but in a body free from infirmity, and still preserving an unabated sense of his own happiness in the favor of God, and of his unspeakable obligation to his goodness—And then I have tried to judge, as well as I could, how such an Angel would comport himself in such a situation. I know not that I ever enlarged upon the thought, either in preaching or writing. Permit me to follow it a little in this paper.

Were I acquainted with this heavenly visitant, I am willing to hope I should greatly reverence him; and, if permitted, be glad, in some cases, to consult him. In some, but not in all, for I think my fear would be equal to my love. Methinks I could never venture to open my heart freely to him, and unfold to him my numberless complaints and infirmities; for, as he could have no experience of the like things himself, I should suppose he would not know how fully to pity me, indeed hardly how to bear with me, if I told him all. Alas, what a preposterous, strange, vile creature should I appear to an Angel, if he knew me as I am. It is well for me that Jesus was made lower than the Angels, and that the human nature he assumed was not distinct from the common nature of mankind, though secured from the common depravity; and because he submitted to be under the law in our name and stead, though he was free from sin himself, yet sin, and its consequences, being (for our sakes) charged upon him, he acquired, in the days of his humiliation, an experimental sympathy with his poor people. He knows the effects of sin and temptation upon us, by that knowledge whereby he knows all things; but he knows them likewise in a way more suitable for our comfort and relief, by the sufferings and exercises he passed through for us. Hence arises encouragement. We have not an High Priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted even as we are. When I add to this, the consideration of his power, promises and grace, and that he is exalted on purpose to pity, relieve and save, I gather courage; with him I dare be free; and am not sorry, but glad, that he knows me perfectly; that not a thought of my heart is hidden from him. For without this infinite and exact knowledge of my disease, how could he effectually administer to my cure? But whither am I rambling? I seem to have lost sight of the Angel already.

already. I am now coming back, that if he cannot effectually pity me, he may at least animate and teach me.

In the first place, I take it for granted this Angel would think himself a stranger and pilgrim upon earth. He would not forget that his πολιτευμα was in heaven. Surely he would look upon all the bustle of human life (farther than the design of his mission might connect him with it) with more indifference than we look upon the sports of children, or the amusements of idiots and lunatics, which give us an uneasiness, rather than excite a desire of joining in them. He would judge of every thing around him, by the reference and tendency it had to promote the will of him that sent him; and the most specious or splendid appearances, considered in any other view, would make no impression upon him.

Consequently, as to his own concernment, all his aim and desire would be to fulfil the will of God. All situations would be alike to him; whether he was commanded, as in the case of Sennacherib, to destroy a mighty army with a stroke; or, as in the case of Hagar, to attend upon a woman, a servant, a slave; both services would be to him equally honorable and important, because he was in both equally pleasing his Lord; which would be his element and his joy, whether he was appointed to guide the reins of empire, or to sweep the streets.

Again, the Angel would doubtless exhibit a striking example of benevolence, for being free from selfish biases, filled with a sense of the love of God, and a knowledge of his adorable perfections; his whole heart, and soul, and strength would be engaged and exerted, both from duty and inclination, to relieve the miseries and advance the happiness of all around him. And in this he would follow the pattern of him, who doth good to all, commanding his sun to rise and his rain to fall upon the just and the unjust.—Though from the same pattern, he would shew an especial regard to the household of faith. An Angel would take but little part in the controversies, contentions, and broils, which might happen in the time of his sojourning here, but would be a friend to all, so far as consistent with the general good.

The will and glory of God being the Angel's great view, and having a more lively sense of the realities of an unseen world, than we can at present conceive, he would certainly, in the first and chief place, have the success and spread of the glorious gospel at heart. Angels, though not redeemed with blood, yet feel themselves nearly concerned in the work of redemption. They admire its mysteries. We may suppose them well informed in the works of creation and providence. But (unlike too many men, who are satisfied with the knowledge of astronomy, mathematics or history) they search and pry into the counsels of redeeming love, rejoice at the conversion of a sinner, and think themselves well employed to be ministering spirits, to minister to the heirs of salvation. It would therefore be his chief delight to espouse and promote their cause, and to employ all his talents and influence in spreading the favor and knowledge of the name of Jesus, which is the only and effectual means of bringing sinners out of bondage and darkness, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

Lastly, though his zeal for the glory of his Lord, would make him willing to continue here, till he had finished the work given him to do; he would, I am persuaded, look forward with desire to the appointed moment of his recall, that he might be freed from beholding and mixing with the sin and vanity of those who know not God, render his account with joy, and be welcomed to heaven, with a Well done good and faithful servant. Surely he would long for this, as a laborer for the setting sun, and would not form any connection with the things of time, which should prompt him to wish his removal protracted for a single hour beyond the period of his prescribed service.

Alas, why am not I more like an Angel! My views in my better judgment are the same. My motives and obligations are even stronger; an Angel is not so deeply indebted to the grace of God, as a believing sinner, who was once upon the brink of destruction, has been redeemed with blood, and might justly have been, before now, shut up with the powers of darkness without hope! Yet the meekest trifles are sufficient to debase my views, damp my activity, and impede my endeavors in the Lord's service, though I profess to have no other end or desire, which can make a continuance in life worthy my wish.

I am, &c.

LETTER XXI.

MY LORD,

DUM loquimur tempus fugit. In the midst of the hurries and changes of this unsettled state, we glide along swiftly towards an unchangeable world, and shall soon have as little connection with the scenes we are now passing through, as we have with what happened before the flood. All that appears great and interesting in the present life, abstracted from its influence upon our internal character, and our everlasting allotment, will soon be as unreal as the visions of the night. This we know and confess, but though our judgments are convinced, it is seldom our hearts are duly affected by the thought. And while I find it easy to write in this moralizing strain, I feel myself disposed to be seriously engaged about trifles, and trifling in the most serious concerns, as if I believed the very contrary. It is with good reason the Lord challenges, as his own prerogative, the full knowlege of the deceitfulness, desperate wickedness and latent depths of the human heart, which is capable of making even his own people so shamefully inconsistent with themselves, and with their acknowledged principles.

I find that when I have something agreeable in expectation (suppose for instance it were a few hours conversation with your Lordship) my imagination paints and prepares the scene before-hand;

hurries me over the intervening space of time, as though it were a useless blank, and anticipates the pleasure I propose. Many of my thoughts of this kind are mere waking dreams, for perhaps the opportunity I am eagerly waiting for never happens, but is swallowed up by some unforeseen disappointment; or if not, something from within or without prevents its answering the idea I had formed of it. Nor does my fancy confine itself within the narrow limits of probabilities, it can busy itself as eagerly in ranging after chimæras and impossibilities, and engage my attention to the ideal pursuit of things which are never likely to happen. In these respects my imagination travels with wings, so that if the wildness, the multiplicity, the variety of the phantoms which pass through my mind in the space of a winter's day, were known to my fellow-creatures, they would probably deem me, as I am often ready to deem myself, but a more sober and harmless kind of lunatic. But if I endeavor to put this active roving power in a right track, and to represent to myself those scenes, which though not yet present, I know will soon be realized, and have a greatness, which the most enlarged exercise of my powers cannot comprehend: if I would fix my thoughts upon the hour of death, the end of the world, the coming of the Judge, or similar subjects; then my imagination is presently tame, cold and jaded, travels very slowly, and is soon wearied in the road of truth, though in the fairy fields of uncertainty and folly it can skip from mountain to mountain. Mr. Addison supposes that the imagination alone, as it can be differently affected, is capable of making us either inconceivably happy or miserable. I am sure it is capable of making us miserable, though I believe it seldom gives us much pleasure, but such as is to be found in a fool's paradise. But I am sure, were my outward life and conduct perfectly free from blame, the disorders and defilement of my imagination, are sufficient to constitute me a chief sinner, in the sight of him to whom the thoughts and intents of the heart are continually open, and who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity.

Upon this head I cannot but lament how universally almost, education is suited, and as it were designed, to add to the stimulus of depraved nature. A cultivated imagination is commended and sought after as a very desirable talent, though it seldom means more than the possession of a large stock of other peoples dreams and fables, with a certain quickness in compounding them, enlarging upon them, and exceeding them by inventions of our own. Poets, painters and even historians, are employed to assist us from our early years, in forming an habitual relish for shadows and colorings, which both indispose for the search of truth, and even unfit us for its reception, unless proposed just in our own way. The best effect of the Belles Lettres upon the imagination seems generally expressed by the word Taste. And what is this taste, but a certain disposition which loves to be humored, soothed and flattered, and which can hardly receive or bear the most important truths, if they be not decorated and set off with such a delicacy and address as taste requires. I say the most important truths:

because truths of a secular importance strike so closely upon the senses, that the decision of taste perhaps is not waited for. Thus, if a man be informed of the birth of his child, or that his house is on fire, the message takes up his thoughts, and he is seldom much disgusted with the manner in which it is delivered. But what an insuperable bar is the refined taste of many, to their profiting by the preaching of the gospel, or even to their hearing it. Though the subject of a discourse be weighty, and some just representation given of the evil of sin, the worth of the soul, and the love of Christ; yet, if there be something amiss in the elocution, language or manner of the preacher, people of taste must be possessed, in a good measure, of grace likewise, if they can hear him with tolerable patience. And perhaps three fourths of those who are accounted the most sensible and judicious in the auditory, will remember little about the sermon, but the tone of the voice, the awkwardness of the attitude, the obsolete expressions and the like; while the poor and simple, not being encumbered with this hurtful accomplishment, receive the messenger as the Lord's servant, and the truth as the Lord's word, and are comforted and edified. But I stop. Some people would say, that I must suppose your Lordship to have but little taste, or else much grace, or I should not venture to trouble you with such letters as mine. I am,

With the greatest sincerity and deference,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's, &c.

LETTER XXII.

MY LORD,

THE Apostle speaks of a blessedness, which it is the design of the gospel to impart to those who receive it. The Galatians once had it, and spoke of it. The Apostle reminds them of their loss, which is left upon record as a warning to us. His expression has led me sometimes to consider, wherein a Christian's present blessedness consists.— I mean that which is attainable in this state of trial, and the sense and exercise of which may be, and too often is, suspended and taken from us. It is a blessedness which, if we speak of man in a natural state, his eye hath not seen, nor his ear heard so as to understand it, nor can the idea of it arise in his heart. It is no way dependant upon outward circumstances. Prosperity cannot impart it, preserve or supply the want of it. Nor can adversity put it out of our reach. The wise cannot acquire it by dint of superior abilities, nor shall the simple miss it for want of capacity.

The state of true believers, compared with that of others, is always blessed. If they are born from above and united to Jesus, they are delivered from condemnation, and are heirs of eternal life, and may therefore well be accounted happy. But I consider now, not their harvest but their first fruits, not their portion in reversion, but the earnest attainable in this life; not what they shall be in heaven,

but what, in an humble attendance upon the Lord, they may be while upon earth. There is even at present, a prize of our high calling set before us. It is much to be desired that we had such a sense of its value, as might prompt us so to run, that we might obtain. I have thought this blessedness may be comprised in five particulars, though in order to take a succinct view of the subject, some of these might be branched out into several others; but I would not by too many sub-divisions give my letter the air of a sermon.

In the first place, a clear, well-grounded, habitual persuasion of our acceptance in the Beloved, is attainable; and though we may be safe, we cannot be said to enjoy blessedness without it. To be in a state of suspense and uncertainty, in a point of so great importance, is painful; and the Lord has accordingly provided, that his people may have strong consolation on this head. They are blessed, therefore, who have such views of the power, grace and suitableness of Jesus, and the certainty and security of redemption in him, together with such a consciousness that they have anchored their hopes, and ventured their all upon his person, work and promise, as furnishes them with a ready answer to all the cavils of unbelief and Satan in the Apostle's manner, Rom. viii. 31—37. That Paul could thus challenge and triumph over all charges and enemies, was not an appendage of his office as an Apostle, but a part of his experience as a believer, and it lies equally open to us. For we have the same gospel and the same promises as he had, nor is the efficacy of the holy Spirit's teaching,

ing, a whit weakened by length of time. But many stop short of this. They have a hope, but it rather springs from their frames and feelings, than from a spiritual apprehension of the Redeemer's engagements and fulness, and therefore fluctuates and changes like the weather. Could they be persuaded to pray with earnestness and importunity, as the Apostle prays for them, Ephes. i. 17, 18. and iii. 16, 19; they would find a blessedness which they have not yet known, for it is said, Ask and ye shall receive—And it is said likewise, Ye receive not because ye ask not.

Could this privilege be enjoyed singly, the natural man would have no objection to it. He would (as he thinks) be pleased to know he should be saved at last, provided that while here he might live in his sins. But the believer will not; cannot think himself blessed, unless he has likewise a conscience void of offence. This was the Apostle's daily exercise, though no one was farther from a legal spirit, or more dependant upon Jesus for acceptance. But if we live in any known sin, or allow ourselves in the customary omission of any known duty, supposing it possible in such a case to preserve a sense of our acceptance, (which can hardly be supposed, for if the Spirit be grieved our evidences decline of course), yet we could not be easy. If a traveller was absolutely sure of reaching his journey's end in safety, yet if he walked with a thorn in his foot, he must take every step in pain. Such a thorn will be felt in the conscience, till we are favored with a simplicity of heart, and made willing in all things, great or small; to yield obedience dience to the authority of the Lord's precepts, and make them the standing rule of our conduct, without wilfully admitting a single exception. At the best, we shall be conscious of innumerable shortcomings, and shameful defilement, but these things will not break our peace, if our hearts are upright. But if we trifle with light, and connive at what we know to be wrong, we shall be weak, restless and uncomfortable. How many, who we would hope are the children of the King, are lean from day to day, because some right-hand or right-eye evil, which they cannot persuade themselves to part with, keeps them halting between two opinions, and they are as distant from happiness, as they are from the possibility of reconciling the incompatible services of God and the world. But happy indeed is he, who condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth.

Real communion with the Lord, in his appointed means of grace, is likewise an important branch of this blessedness. They were instituted for this end, and are sufficient, by virtue of his power and Spirit, to answer it. I do not believe this enjoyment will be always equal. But I believe a comfortable sense of it in some measure, is generally attainable. To read the scripture, not as an attorney may read a will, merely to know the sense, but as the heir reads it, as a description and proof of his interest. To hear the gospel, as the voice of our Beloved, so as to have little leisure either for admiring the abilities, or censuring the defects of the preacher; and in prayer to feel a liberty of pouring out our hearts before the Lord, to behold some glances of his goodness passing before us, and to breathe forth before him the tempers of a child, the spirit of adoption: And thus, by beholding his glory, to be conformed more and more to his image, and to renew our strength, by drawing water out of the wells of salvation: Herein is blessedness. They who have tasted it can say, it is good for me to draw nigh to God. The soul thus refreshed by the water of life, is preserved from thirsting after the vanities of the world; thus instructed in the sanctuary, comes down from the mount filled with heavenly wisdom, anointed with a holy unction, and thereby qualified to judge, speak and act in character, in all the relations and occasions of secular life. In this way, besides the pleasure, a spiritual taste is acquired, something analogous to the meaning of the word taste, when applied to music or good breeding, by which discords and improprieties are observed and avoided, as it were by instinct, and what is right is felt and followed, not so much by the force of rules, as by a habit insensibly acquired, and in which the substance of all necessary rules are, if I may so say, digested. O that I knew more of this blessedness, and more of its effects.

Another branch of blessedness, is a power of reposing ourselves and our concerns upon the Lord's faithfulness and care: And may be considered in two respects. A reliance upon him that he will surely provide for us, guide us, protect us, be our help in trouble, our shield in danger; so that however poor, weak and defenceless in ourselves, we may rejoice in his all-sufficiency as our own—and farther, in consequence of this, a peaceful humble submission to his will, under all events, which upon their first impression are contrary to our own views and desires. Surely in a world like this, where every thing is uncertain, where we are exposed to trials on every hand, and know not but a single hour may bring forth something painful, yea dreadful to our natural sensations, there can be no blessedness, but so far as we are thus enabled to entrust and resign all to the direction and faithfulness of the Lord our shepherd. For want of more of this spirit, multitudes of professing Christians perplex and wound themselves, and dishonour their high calling, by continual anxieties, alarms and complaints. They think nothing safe under the Lord's keeping, unless their own eye is likewise upon it, and are seldom satisfied with any of his dispensations. For though he gratify their desires in nine instances, a refusal in the tenth, spoils the relish of all, and they shew the truths of the gospel can afford them little comfort, if self is crossed. But blessed is the man who trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. He shall not be afraid of evil-tidings, he shall be kept in perfect peace, though the earth be moved, and the mountains cast into the midst of the sea.

The paper admonishes me it is time to relieve your Lordship—And I have not room to detain you long upon the fifth particular. It belongs to a believer's blessedness, to feel his spirit chearful and active for the Lord's service, in the world. For to what other end should he wish to live? If he thought of himself only, it would be better to depart and be with Jesus immediately. But he is a debtor to his grace and love; and though strictly he can make no returns—yet he longs to shew his thankfulness; and if the Lord give him a heart to redeem his time, to devote his strength and influence, and lay himself out for his service—that he may be instrumental in promoting his cause, in comforting his people—or enable him to let his light shine before men, that his God and Father may be honoured—he will account it blessedness. This is indeed the great end of life, and he knows it will evidently appear so at the approach of death. And therefore while others are cumbered about many things, he esteems this the one thing needful.

I remain, my Lord,

Your Lordship's, &c.

M Y L O R D,

THAT I may not weary you by a preamble, I oblige myself to take the turn of my letter from some passage of scripture, and I fix upon that which just now occurred to my thoughts, a clause in that pattern of prayer, which he who best knows our state, has been pleased to leave for the instruction of his people, in their great concern of waiting at his throne of grace, Matt. vi. 13.—And lead us not into temptation. This petition is seasonable at all times, and to all persons, who have any right knowlege of themselves or their spiritual calling.

The word temptation, taken at large, includes every kind of trial. To tempt is to try or prove. In this sense, it is said, the Lord tempted Abraham; that is, he tried him, for God cannot tempt to evil. He proposed such an act of obedience to him, as was a test of his faith, love, dependance and integrity. Thus all our afflictions under his gracious management are appointed to prove, manifest, exercise and purify the graces of his children. And not afflictions only, prosperity likewise is a state of temptation, and many who have endured sharp sufferings and came off honorably, have been afterwards greatly hurt and ensnared by prosperity. To this purpose the histories of David and Hezekiah are in point. But by temptation we more frequently understand the wiles and force which Satan employs employs in assaulting our peace, or spreading snares for our feet. He is always practising against us, either directly and from himself, by the access he has to our hearts, or mediately by the influence he has over the men and the things of this world. The words which follow confirm this sense—Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, απο του πονηρου from the evil one, as it might be properly rendered here, and in 1 John, v. 19. The subtilty and power of this adversary are very great; he is an over-match for us, and we have no hope of safety but in the Lord's protection. Satan's action upon the heart may be illustrated by the action of the wind upon the sea. The sea sometimes appears smooth, but it is always disposed to swell and rage, and to obey the impulse of every storm. Thus the heart may be sometimes quiet, but the wind of temptation will awaken and rouse it in a moment; for it is essential to our depraved nature to be unstable and yielding as the water; and when it is under the impression of the enemy, its violence can only be controlled by him who says to the raging sea, Be still, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed. The branches of temptation are almost innumerable, but the principal may be reduced to the several faculties of the soul (as we commonly speak) to which they are more directly suited.

He has temptations for the understanding. He can blind the mind with prejudices and false reasonings, and ply it with arguments for infidelity, 'till the most obvious truths become questionable. Even where the gospel has been received, he can insinuate error, which for the suddenness and malignity nity of its effects may be properly compared to poison. A healthy man may be poisoned in a moment, and if he be, the baneful drug is usually mixed with his food. Many who for a while seemed to be sound in the faith, have had their judgments strongly and strangely perverted, and prevailed upon to renounce and oppose the truths they once prized and defended. Such instances are striking proofs of human weakness, and loud calls to watchfulness and dependance, and to beware of leaning to our own understandings. For these purposes he employs both preachers and authors, who by fine words and fair speeches beguile the hearts of the unwary. And by his immediate influence upon the mind, he is able (if the Lord permits him) to entangle those who are providentially placed out of the reach of corrupt and designing men.

He tempts the conscience. By working upon the unbelief of our hearts, and darkening the glory of the gospel, he can hold down the soul to the number, weight and aggravation of its sins, so that it shall not be able to look up to Jesus, nor draw any comfort from his blood, promises and grace. How many go burdened in this manner, seeking relief from duties, and perhaps spending their strength in things not commanded, though they hear, and perhaps acknowlege the gospel? Nor are the wisest and most established able to withstand his assaults, if the Lord withdraw and give him leave to employ his power and subtilty unrestrained. The gospel affords sufficient ground for an abiding assurance of hope, nor should we rest satisfied without it. However, the possession and preservation of this privilege depends upon the Lord's presence with the soul, and his shielding us from Satan's attacks, for I am persuaded he is able to sift and shake the strongest believer upon earth.

He has likewise temptations suited to the will. Jesus makes his people willing in the day of his power; yet there is a contrary principle remaining within them, of which Satan knows how to avail himself. There are occasions in which he almost prevails to set self again upon the throne, as Dagon was raised after he had fallen before the ark. How else should any, who have tasted that the Lord is gracious, give way to a repining spirit, account his dispensations hard, or his precepts too strict, so as to shrink from their observance through the fear of men, or a regard to their worldly interest.

Farther, he has snares for the affections. In managing these he gains a great advantage from our situation in a world that knows not God. The scripture gives Satan the title of God of this world; and believers learn, by painful experience, how great his power is in and over the persons and things of it. So that to be steadfast in wisdom's ways, requires unremitted efforts, like pressing through a crowd, or swimming against a stream. How hard is it to live in the midst of pitch and not be defiled. The air of the world is infectious. Our business and unavoidable connections are so interwoven with occasions of sin, and there is so much in our hearts suited to them, that unless we are incessantly upheld by almighty strength, we cannot stand a day or an hour. Past victories afford us no greater security than they did Samson, who was shamefully

surprized by enemies whom he had formerly conquered. Nor are we only tempted by compliances that are evil in themselves. With respect to these, perhaps, conscience may be awake, and we stand upon our guard. But we are still upon Satan's ground, and while he may seem to allow himself defeated, he can dexterously change his method, and come upon us where we do not suspect him. For Perimus in licitis. Perhaps our greatest danger arises from things in themselves lawful. He can tempt us by our nearest and dearest friends, and pervert every blessing of a kind providence into an occasion of drawing our hearts from the Giver; yea, spiritual blessings, gifts, comforts and even graces are sometimes the engines by which he practises against us, to fill us with vain confidence and self-sufficiency, or to lull us into formality and indolence.

That wonderful power, which we call the imagination, is, I suppose, rather the medium of the soul's perceptions during its present state of union with the body, than a spiritual faculty, strictly speaking; but it partakes largely of that depravity which sin has brought upon our whole frame, and affords Satan an avenue for assaulting us with the most terrifying, if not the most dangerous of his temptations. At the best we have but an indifferent command over it. We cannot, by an act of our own will, exclude a thousand painful, wild, inconsistent and hurtful ideas, which are ever ready to obtrude themselves upon our minds; and a slight alteration in the animal system, in the motion of the blood or nervous spirits, is sufficient to withdraw it wholly from our dominion, and to leave us like a city without walls or gates, exposed to the incursion of our enemy. We are fearfully and wonderfully made, and with all our boasted knowledge of other things can form no conception of what is so vastly interesting to us, the mysterious connection between soul and body, and the manner in which they are mutually affected by each other. The effects we too sensibly feel. The wisest of men would be accounted fools or mad, were they to express in words a small part of what passes within them; and it would appear that much of the soberest life, is little better than a waking dream: but how dreadful are the consequences, when the Lord permits some hidden pin in the human machine to be altered. Immediately a door flies open, which no hand but his can shut, and the enemy pours in like a flood; falsehood and horror and the blackness of darkness, the judgment is borne down and disabled, and the most distressing illusions seize us with all the apparent force of evidence and demonstration. When this is the case, in a certain degree, we call it distraction; but there are various degrees of it, which leave a person in the possession of his senses, as to the things of common life, and yet are sufficient, with respect to his spiritual concerns, to shake the very foundations of his hope, and deprive him of all peace and comfort, and make him a terror to himself. All the Lord's people are not called to navigate in these deep waters of soul distress, but all are liable. Ah, if we knew what some suffer; the Horribilia de Deo, et Terribilia de Fide, which excruciate the minds of those over whom Satan is permitted to tyrannize in this way; surely we should be more earnest and frequent in praying, Lead us not into temptation. From some little sense I have of the malice and subtilty of our spiritual enemies, and the weakness of those barriers which we have to prevent their assaults, I am fully persuaded that nothing less than the continual exertion of that almighty power which preserves the stars in their orbits, can maintain our peace of mind for an hour or a minute. In this view, all comparative difference in external situation seems to be annihilated; for as the Lord's presence can make his people happy in a dungeon, so there are temptations which, if we felt them, would instantly render us incapable of receiving a moment's satisfaction from an assemblage of all earthly blessings, and make the company of our dearest friends tasteless, if not insupportable.

Ah, how little do the gay and the busy think of these things! How little indeed do they think of them who profess to believe them! How faint is the sense of our obligations to him, who freely submitted to the fiercest onsets of the powers of darkness, to free us from the punishment due to our sins; otherwise we must have been for ever shut up with those miserable and merciless spirits, who delight in our torment, and who, even in the present state, if they get access to our minds, can make our existence a burden!

But our Lord, who knows and considers our weakness, of which we are so little aware, allows and directs us to pray, Lead us not into temptation. We are not to expect an absolute freedom from temptation ; we are called to be soldiers, and must sometimes meet with enemies, and perhaps with wounds. Yet considering this prayer as provided by him who knows what we are, and where we are, it may afford us both instruction and consolation.

It calls to a constant reflection upon our own weakness. Believers, especially young ones, are prone to rest too much in grace received. They feel their hearts warm, and like Peter are ready to please themselves with thinking how they would act in such or such a state of trial. It is as if the Lord had said, Poor worms, be not high-minded, but fear and pray that, if it may be, you may be kept from learning, by bitter experience, how weak your supposed strength is. It sweetly intimates that all our ways, and all our enemies are in the hands of our great Shepherd. He knows our path. We are short-sighted, and cannot tell what an hour may bring forth ; but we are under his protection, and if we depend upon him we need not be anxiously afraid. He will be faithful to the trust we repose in him, and will suffer no temptation to overtake us ; but what he will support us under and bring us through. But it becomes us to beware of security and presumption, to keep our eyes upon him, and not to think ourselves safe a moment longer than our spirits feel and breathe the meaning of this petition.

It implies, likewise, the duty of watchfulness on our part. As our Lord joins them elsewhere, Watch and pray. If we desire not to be led into temptation, surely we are not to run into it. If we wish to be preserved from error, we are to guard against a curious and reasoning spirit. If we would preserve peace of conscience, we must beware of trifling with the light and motions of the Holy Spirit, for without his assistance we cannot maintain faith in exercise. If we would not be ensnared by the men of the world, we are to keep at a proper distance from them. The less we have to do with them the better, excepting so far as the providence of God makes it our duty in the discharge of our callings and relations, and taking opportunities of doing them good. And though we cannot wholly shut Satan out of our imaginations, we should be cautious that we do not wilfully provide fuel for his flame, but intreat the Lord to set a watch upon our eyes and our ears, and to teach us to reject the first motions and the smallest appearances of evil.
with

I have been so intent upon my subject, that I have once and again forgot I was writing to your Lordship. Otherwise I should not have let my lucubration run to so great a length, which I certainly did not intend when I began. I shall not add to this fault by making an apology. I have touched upon a topic of great importance to myself. I am one among many who have suffered greatly for want of paying more attention to my need of this prayer. O that I could be wiser hereafter, and always act and speak as knowing that I am always upon a field of battle, and beset by legions.

I am, with great respect,

My Lord, &c.

LETTER XXIV.

MY LORD,

WITHOUT any preamble, I purpose now to wait on your Lordship, with a few thoughts on the meaning of that name which first obtained at Antioch, in other words, what it is to be a Christian? What are the effects, which (making allowance for the unavoidable infirmities attending upon the present state of mortality) may be expected from a real experimental knowledge of the gospel. I would not insinuate that none are Christians, who do not come up to the character I would describe, for then I fear I should unchristian myself, but only to consider what the scripture encourages us to aim at, as the prize of our high calling in this life. It is generally allowed and lamented, that we are too apt to live below our privileges, and to stop short of what the spirit and the promises of the gospel point out to us as attainable.

Mr. Pope's admired line, An honest man's the noblest work of God; may be admitted as a truth, when rightly explained. A Christian is the noblest work of God in this visible world, and bears a much brighter impression of his glory and goodness, than the sun in the firmament; and none but a Christian can be strictly and properly honest; all others are too much under the power of self, to do universally to others, as they would others should do do unto them, and nothing but an uniform conduct upon this principle deserves the name of honesty.

The Christian is a new creature, born and taught from above. He has been convinced of his guilt and misery as a sinner, has fled for refuge to the hope set before him, has seen the Son and believed on him. His natural prejudices against the glory and grace of God's salvation, have been subdued and silenced by almighty power, he has accepted the Beloved, and is made acceptable in him. He now knows the Lord, has renounced the confused, distant, uncomfortable notions, he once formed of God; and beholds him in Christ, who is the way, the truth and the life; the only door by which we can enter to any true, satisfying knowledge of God, or communion with him. But he sees God in Christ, reconciled, a Father, a Savior and a Friend, who has freely forgiven him all his sins, and given him the spirit of adoption; he is now no longer a servant, much less a stranger, but a son; and because a son, an heir already interested in all the promises, admitted to the throne of grace, and an assured expectant of eternal glory. The gospel is designed to give us not only a peradventure or a probability, but a certainty both of our acceptance and our perseverance, till death shall be swallowed up in life. And though many are sadly fluctuating and perplexed upon this head, and perhaps all are so for a season, yet there are those who can say, we know that we are of God, and therefore they are steadfast and unmoveable in his way; because they are confident that their labor shall not be in vain, but that when they shall be absent from the body, they shall be present with their Lord. This is the state of the advanced, experienced Christian, who being enabled to make his profession the chief business of his life, is strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Every one who has this hope in Christ, purifieth himself even as he is pure. I would now attempt a sketch of the Christian's temper, formed upon these principles and hopes, under the leading branches of its exercise, respecting God, himself and his fellow-creatures.

The Christian's temper Godward, is evidenced by Humility. He has received from Gethsemane and Golgotha, such a sense of the evil of sin and of the holiness of God, combined with his matchless love to sinners, as has deeply penetrated his heart; he has an affecting remembrance of the state of rebellion and enmity, in which he once lived against this holy and good God; and he has a quick perception of the defilements and defects which still debase his best services. His mouth is therefore stopped as to boasting, he is vile in his own eyes, and is filled with wonder, that the Lord should visit such a sinner with such a salvation. He sees so vast a disproportion between the obligations he is under to grace, and the returns he makes, that he is disposed, yea, constrained, to adopt the Apostle's words without affectation, and to account himself less than the least of all saints; and knowing his own heart, while he sees only the outside of others, he is not easily persuaded there can be a believer upon earth so faint, so unfruitful, so unworthy as himself. Yet, though abased, he is not discouraged, discouraged, for he enjoys peace. The dignity, offices, blood, righteousness, faithfulness and compassion of the Redeemer, in whom he rests; trusts and lives, for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, are adequate to all his wants and wishes, provide him with an answer to every objection, and give him no less confidence in God, than if he were sinless as an Angel. For he sees that though sin has abounded in him, grace has much more abounded in Jesus. With respect to the past, all things are become new; with respect to the present and future, he leans upon an Almighty arm, and relies upon the word and power, which made and upholds the heavens and the earth. Though he feels himself unworthy of the smallest mercies, he claims and expects the greatest blessings that God can bestow. And being rooted and grounded in the knowledge and love of Christ, his peace abides, and is not greatly affected, either by the variation of his own frames, or the changes of God's dispensations towards him while here. With such a sense of himself, such a heart-felt peace and heavenly hope, how can his spirit but breathe Love to his God and Savior. It is indeed the perfection of his character and happiness, that his soul is united by love to the chief good. The love of Christ is the joy of his heart, and the spring of his obedience. With his Savior's presence, he finds a heaven begun upon earth, and without it, all the other glories of the heavenly state would not content him. The excellence of Christ, his love to sinners, especially his dying love, his love to himself in seeking and saving him when lost, saving him to the uttermost—but I must stop—Your Lordship can better conceive than I can describe, how and why Jesus is dear to the heart that knows him. That part of the Christian's life which is not employed in the active service of his Lord, is chiefly spent in seeking and maintaining communion with him; for this he plies the throne, and studies the word of grace, and frequents the ordinances where the Lord has promised to meet with his people. These are his golden hours; and when thus employed—how poor and trivial does all that the world calls great and important appear in his eyes! Yea he is solicitous to keep up an intercourse of heart with his Beloved, in his busiest scenes, and so far as he can succeed, it alleviates all his labours, and sweetens all his troubles. And when he is neither communing with his Lord, nor acting for him, he accounts his time lost, and is ashamed and grieved. The truth of his love is manifested by Submission: this is two-fold, and absolute, and without reserve in each—He submits to his revealed will, as made known to him by precept and by his own example. He aims to tread in his Savior's footsteps, and makes conscience of all his commandments, without exception and without hesitation. Again, he submits to his providential will. He yields to his sovereignty, acquiesces in his wisdom; he knows he has no right to complain of any thing, because he is a sinner; and he has no reason, because he is sure the Lord does all things well. Therefore this submission is not forced, but is an act of Trust. He knows he is not more unworthy than he is unable to chuse for himself, and therefore

therefore rejoices that the Lord has undertaken to manage for him; and were he compelled to make his own choice, he could only chuse, that all his concerns should remain in that hand to which he has already committed them. And thus he judges of public as well as of his personal affairs. He cannot be an unaffected spectator of national sins, nor without apprehension of their deserved consequences, he feels and almost trembles for others, but he himself dwells under the shadow of the Almighty, in a sanctuary that cannot be forced, and therefore should he see the earth shaken, and the mountains cast into the midst of the sea, his heart would not be greatly moved, for God is his refuge. The Lord reigns. He sees his Savior's hands directing every dark appearance, and over-ruling all, to the accomplishment of his own great purposes; this satisfies him; and though the winds and waves should be high, he can venture his own little bark in the storm, for he has an infallible and almighty pilot on board with him. And indeed why should he fear, when he has nothing to lose? His best concerns are safe, and other things he holds as gifts from his Lord, to whose call he is ready to resign them, in whatever way he pleases, well knowing that creatures and instruments cannot, of themselves, touch a hair of his head without the Lord's permission, and that if he does permit them, it must be for the best.

I might enlarge farther—but I shall proceed to consider the Christian's temper respecting himself. He lives godly and sobriety. By sobriety we mean more than that he is not a drunkard. His tempers toward God of course form him to a moderation in all temporal things. He is not scrupulous or superstitious; he understands the liberty of the gospel, that every creature of God is good, if it be received with thanksgiving: he does not aim at being needlessly singular, nor practice self-devised austerities. The Christian is neither a Stoic nor a Cynic, yet he finds daily cause for watchfulness and restraint. Satan will not often tempt a believer to gross crimes; our greatest snares, and sorest conflicts are usually found in things lawful in themselves, but hurtful to us by their abuse, engrossing too much of our time, or of our hearts, or somehow indisposing us for communion with the Lord.—The Christian will be jealous of any thing that might entangle his affections, damp his zeal, or straiten him in his opportunities of serving his Savior. He is likewise content with his situation, because the Lord chuses it for him; his spirit is not eager for additions and alterations in his circumstances. If divine providence points out and leads to a change, he is ready to follow, though it should be what the world would call from a better to a worse. For he is a pilgrim and a stranger here, and a citizen of heaven. As people of fortune sometimes, in travelling, submit chearfully to inconvenient accommodations, very different from their homes, and comfort themselves with thinking they are not always to live so. So the Christian is not greatly solicitous about externals. If he has them, he will use them moderately—If he has but little of them, he can make a good shift without them, he is but upon a journey and will soon be at home.

If

If he be rich, experience confirms our Lord's words, Luke xii. 15. and satisfies him that a large room, a crowd of servants, and twenty dishes upon his table, add nothing to the real happiness of life. Therefore he will not have his heart set upon such things. If he be in a humbler state, he is more disposed to pity than to envy those above him; for he judges they must have many incumbrances from which he is freed: however the will of God and the light of his countenance, are the chief things the Christian whether rich or poor regards, and therefore his moderation is made known unto all men.

A third branch of the Christian's temper respects his fellow-creatures. And here, methinks, if I had not filled a sheet already, I could enlarge with pleasure. We have in this degenerate day, among those who claim and are allowed the name of Christian, too many of a narrow, selfish, mercenary spirit, but in the beginning it was not so. The gospel is designed to cure such a spirit, but gives no indulgence to it. A Christian has the mind of Christ, who went about doing good, who makes his sun to shine upon the good and the evil, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust. His Lord's example forms him to the habit of diffusive Benevolence; he breathes a spirit of good-will to mankind; and rejoices in every opportunity of being useful to the souls and bodies of others, without respect to parties or interests. He commiserates, and would if possible alleviate the miseries of all around him: and if his actual services are restrained by want of ability, yet all share in his sympathy and prayers. Acting in the spirit of his master, he frequently meets with a measure of the like treatment; but if his good is requited with evil, he labors to overcome evil with good. He feels himself a sinner, and needs much forgiveness; this makes him ready to forgive. He is not haughty, captious, easily offended, or hard to be reconciled, for at the feet of Jesus he has learned Meekness; and when he meets with unkindness or injustice, he considers that though he has not deserved such things from men, they are instruments employed by his Heavenly Father, (from whom he has deserved to suffer much more) for his humiliation and chastisement; and is therefore more concerned for their sins than for his own sufferings, and prays, after the pattern of his Savior, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do: He knows he is fallible, therefore cannot be positive. He knows he is frail, and therefore dares not be censorious. As a member of society he is Just; punctual in the discharge of every relative duty, faithful to his engagements and promises, rendering to all their dues, obedient to lawful authority, and acting to all men according to the golden rule of doing as he would be done by. His conduct is Simple, devoid of artifice and consistent, attending to every branch of duty; and in the closet, the family, the church, and in the transactions of common life he is the same man, for in every circumstance he serves the Lord, and aims to maintain a conscience void of offence in his sight. No small part of the beauty of his profession in the sight of men, consists in the due government of his tongue. The law of truth and kindness and purity is upon his lips. He abhors lying, and is so far from inventing venting a slander, that he will not repeat a report to the disadvantage of his neighbour, however true, without a proper call. His converse is chearful, but inoffensive, and he will no more wound another with his wit (if he has a talent that way) than with a knife. His speech is with grace, seasoned with salt, and suited to promote the peace and edification of all around him.

Such is the Christian in civil life, but though he loves all mankind, he stands in a nearer relation, and bears an especial Brotherly Love, to all who are partakers of the faith and hope of the gospel. This regard is not confined within the pale of a denomination, but extended to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. He calls no man Master himself, nor does he wish to impose a Shibboleth of his own upon others. He rejoices in the image of God wherever he sees it, and in the work of God wherever it is carried on. Though tenacious of the truths which the Lord has taught him, his heart is open to those who differ from him in less essential points, and allows to others that right of private judgment which he claims for himself, and is disposed to hold communion in love, with all who hold the head. He cannot indeed countenance those, who set aside the one foundation which God has laid in Zion, and maintain errors derogatory to the honor of his Savior, or subversive of the faith and experience of his people; yet he wishes well to their persons, pities and prays for them, and is ready in meekness to instruct them that oppose; but there is no bitterness in his zeal, being

being sensible that raillery and invective are dishonorable to the cause of truth, and quite unsuitable in the mouth of a sinner, who owes all that distinguishes him from the vilest of men, to the free grace of God. In a word, he is influenced by the wisdom from above, which as it is pure, is likewise peaceable, gentle and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good works; without partiality and without hypocrisy.

I must just recur to my first head, and observe that with this spirit and deportment, the Christian, while he is enabled to maintain a conscience void of offence towards God and man, is still sensible and mindful of indwelling sin, he has his eye more upon his rule than upon his attainments, and therefore finds and confesses that in every thing he comes exceedingly short, and that his best services are not only defective but defiled. He accounts himself an unprofitable servant, is abased in his own eyes, and derives all his hope and comfort, as well as his strength from Jesus, whom he has known, received and trusted, to whom he has committed his soul, in whom he rejoices, and worships God in the spirit, renouncing all confidence in the flesh, and esteeming all things as loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord.

If I have lately been rather tardy in making my payments to your Lordship, I have proportionably increased the quantity. It is high time I should now relieve your patience. I hope I long to be a Christian indeed. And I hope this hasty exemplification of my wishes, will answer to your Lordship's

Lordship's experience better than I fear it does to my own. May I beg a remembrance in your prayers, that he who has given me to will and desire, may work in me to be and to do according to his own good pleasure.

I am,

LETTER XXV.

MY LORD,

MY London journey, which prevented my writing in October, made me amends by an opportunity of waiting upon your Lordship in person; such seasons are not only pleasant at the time, but afford me pleasure in the review—I could have wished the half hour we were together by ourselves prolonged to half a day. The subject your Lordship was pleased to suggest has been often upon my mind, and glad should I be were I able to offer you any thing satisfactory upon it. There is no doubt but first religious impressions are usually mingled with much of a legal spirit, and that conscience at such a time is not only tender but misinformed and scrupulous: and I believe, as your Lordship intimated, that when the mind is more enlightened, and we feel a liberty from many fetters we had imposed upon ourselves, we are in danger of verging too far towards the other extreme. It seems to me that no one person can adjust the medium, and draw the line exactly for another. There are so many particulars in every situation, of which a stranger cannot be a competent judge, and the best human advices and models are mixed with such defects, that it is not right to expect others to be absolutely guided by our rules, nor is it safe for us implicitly to adopt the decisions or practices of others. But the scripture undoubtedly furnishes sufficient and infallible rules for every person, however circumstanced; and the throne of grace is appointed for us to wait upon the Lord for the best exposition of his precepts. Thus David often prays to be led in the right way, in the path of judgment. By frequent prayer and close acquaintance with the scripture, and an habitual attention to the frame of our hearts; there is a certain delicacy of spiritual taste and discernment to be acquired, which renders a nice disquisition concerning the nature and limits of the Adiaphora as they are called, or how near we may go to the utmost bounds of what is right, without being wrong, quite unnecessary. Love is the clearest and most persuasive casuist, and when our love to the Lord is in lively exercise, and the rule of his word is in our eye, we seldom make great mistakes. And I believe the overdoings of a young convert, proceeding from an honest simplicity of heart, and a desire of pleasing the Lord, are more acceptable in his sight, than a certain coolness of conduct which frequently takes place afterward, when we are apt to look back with pity upon our former weakness, and secretly to applaud ourselves for our present greater attainments in knowledge, though perhaps (alas that it should ever be so) we may have lost as much in warmth as we have gained in light.

From the time we know the Lord, and are bound to him by the cords of love and gratitude, the two chief points we should have in our view, I apprehend are to maintain communion with him in our own souls, and to glorify him in the sight of men. Agreeable to these views, though the scripture does does not enumerate or decide, totidem verbis, for or against many things which some plead for and others condemn, yet it furnishes us with some general canons, which, if rightly applied, will perhaps go a good way towards settling the debate, at least to the satisfaction of those who would rather please God than man. Some of these canons I will just mark to your Lordship—Rom. xii. 1, 2. 1 Cor. viii. 13, and x. 31. 2 Cor. vi. 17. Ephes. iv. 30. Ephes. v. 11, 15, 16. 1 Thes. v. 22. Ephes. vi. 18. To which I may add, as suitable to the present times, Isa. xxii. 12. Luke xxi. 34. I apprehend the spirit of these and similar passages of scripture (for it would be easy to adduce a larger number) will bring a Christian under such restrictions as follow.

To avoid and forbear, for his own sake, whatever has a tendency to damp and indispose his spirit in attendance upon the means of grace, for such things, if they be not condemned as sinful per se, if they be not absolutely unlawful, yea though they be, when duly regulated, lawful and right (for often our chief snares are entwined with our blessings); yet if they have a repeated and evident tendency to deaden our hearts to divine things, of which each person's experience must determine; there must be something in them, either in season, measure or circumstance, wrong to us, and let them promise what they will, they do but rob us of our gold to pay us with counters. For the light of God's countenance, and an open cheerfulness of spirit in walking with him in private is our chief joy; and we must be already greatly hurt, if any thing can be pursued; pursued, allowed or rested in as a tolerable substitute for it.

For the sake of the church, and the influence example may have upon his fellow-christians, the law of charity and prudence will often require a believer to abstain from some things not because they are unlawful, but inexpedient. Thus the Apostle, though strenuous for the right of his christian liberty, would have abridged himself of the use, so as to eat no meat, rather than offend a weak brother, rather than mislead him to act against the present light of his conscience. Upon this principle, if I could, without hurt to myself, attend some public amusements, as a concert or oratorio, and return from thence with a warm heart to my closet (the possibility of which in my own case I greatly question) yet I should think it my duty to forbear, lest some weaker than myself should be encouraged by me to make the like experiment, though in their own minds they might fear it was wrong, and have no other reason to think it lawful but because I did it: in which case I should suspect that though I received no harm they would. And I have known and conversed with some who I fear have made shipwreck of their profession; who have dated their first decline from imitating others, whom they thought wiser and better than themselves, in such kind of compliances. And it seems that an obligation to this sort of self-denial rises and is strengthened in proportion to the weight and influence of our characters. Were I in private life, I do not know that I should think it sinful to kill a partridge or a hare; but as a Minister I no more dare dare do it than I dare join in a drunken frolic, because I know it would give offence to some, and be pleaded for as a licence by others.

There is a duty and a charity likewise which we owe to the world at large, as well as a faithfulness to God and his grace, in our necessary converse among them. This seems to require, that though we should not be needlessly singular, yet for their instruction, and for the honor of our Lord and Master, we should keep up a certain kind of singularity, and shew ourselves called to be a separated people. That though the providence of God has given us callings and relations to fill up (in which we cannot be too exact) yet we are not of the world, but belong to another community, and act from other principles, by other rules and to other ends than the generality of those about us. I have observed that the world will oftēn leave professors in quiet possession of their notions and sentiments and places of worship, provided they will not be too stiff in the matter of conformity with their more general customs and amusements—But I fear many of them have had their prejudices strengthened against our holy religion by such compliances, and have thought that if there were such joy and comfort to be found in the ways of God, as they hear from our pulpits, professors would not, in such numbers and so often, run amongst them to beg a relief from the burden of time hanging upon their hands. As our Lord Jesus is the great representative of his people in heaven, he does them the honor to continue a succession of them as his representatives upon earth. Happy are they who are favored with most

most of the holy unction, and best enabled to manifest to all around them, by their spirit, tempers and conversation, what is the proper design and genuine effect of his gospel upon the hearts of sinners.

In our way of little life in the country, serious people often complain of the snares they meet with from worldly people, and yet they must mix with them to get a livelihood. I advise them, if they can, to do their business with the world, as they do it in the rain. If their business calls them abroad, they will not leave it undone for fear of being a little wet; but then, when it is done, they presently seek shelter, and will not stand in the rain for pleasure. So providential and necessary calls of duty, that lead us into the world, will not hurt us if we find the spirit of the world unpleasant, and are glad to retire from it, and keep out of it as much as our relative duties will permit. That which is our cross is not so likely to be our snare; but if that spirit which we should always watch and pray against, infects and assimilates our minds to itself, then we are sure to suffer loss, and act below the dignity of our profession.

The value of time is likewise to be taken into the account.—It is a precious talent, and our Christian profession opens a wide field for the due improvement of it. Much of it has been already lost, and therefore we are exhorted to redeem it. I think many things which custom pleads for will be excluded from a suitableness to a Christian, for this one reason, that they are not consistent with the simplest notion of the redemption of time. It is

is generally said we need relaxation, I allow it in a sense. The Lord himself has provided it, and because our spirits are too weak to be always upon the wing in meditation and prayer, he has appointed to all men, from the king downwards, something to do in a secular way. The poor are to labor, the rich are not exempted from something equivalent. And when every thing of this sort in each person's situation is properly attended to, I apprehend, if the heart be alive and in a right state, spiritual concerns will present themselves, as affording the noblest, sweetest and most interesting relaxation from the cares and business of life; as, on the other hand, that business will be the best relaxation; and unbending of the mind from religious exercises; and between the two, perhaps there ought to be but little mere leisure time. A life in this sense, divided between God and the world, is desirable—When one part of it is spent in retirement, seeking after and conversing with him whom our souls love, and the other part of it employed in active services for the good of our family, friends, the church and society, for his sake. Every hour which does not fall in with one or other of these views, I apprehend is lost time.

The day in which we live, seems likewise to call for something of a peculiar spirit in the Lord's people. It is a day of abounding sin, and I fear a day of impending judgment. The world, as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, is secure. We are soon to have a day of apparent humiliation. But the just causes for it are not confined to one day, day, but will subsist and too probably increase every day. If I am not mistaken in the signs of the times, there never was, within the annals of the English history, a period in which the spirit and employment described Ezek. ix. 4. could be more suitable than the present. The Lord calls for mourning and weeping, but the words of many are stout against him; new species of dissipation are invented almost daily, and the language of those who bear the greatest sway in what is called the polite circle, I mean the interpretative language of their hearts, is like that of the rebellious Jews, Jer. xlv. 16, 17, &c. As for the word which thou hast spoken, we will not hearken unto thee at all—In short, things are coming to a point, and it seems to be almost putting to the vote whether the Lord or Baal be God. In this state of affairs, methinks, we cannot be too explicit in avowing our attachment to the Lord, nor too careful in avoiding an improper correspondence with those who are in confederacy against him. We know not how soon we may greatly need that mark of providential protection which is restrained to those who sigh and cry for our abominations. Upon the whole, it appears to me, that it is more honorable, comfortable and safe (if we cannot exactly hit the golden mean) to be thought by some too scrupulous and precise, than actually to be found too compliant with those things, which, if not absolutely contrary to a divine commandment, are hardly compatible with the genius of the gospel, or conformable to the mind that was in Christ Jesus, which ought also to be in his people. The places and amusements which the world frequent and admire, where occasions and temptations to sin are cultivated, where the law of what is called good-breeding, is the only law which may not be violated with impunity, where sinful passions are provoked and indulged, where the fear of God is so little known or regarded, that those who do fear him must hold their tongues though they should hear his name blasphemed, can hardly be a Christian's voluntary chosen ground. Yet I fear these characters will apply to every kind of polite amusement or assembly in the kingdom.

As to family connections, I cannot think we are bound to break or slight them. But as believers and their friends often live as it were in two elements, there is a mutual awkwardness which makes their interviews rather dry and tedious.— But upon that account they are less frequent than they would otherwise be, which seems an advantage. Both sides keep up returns of civility and affection, but as they cannot unite in sentiment and leading inclination, they will not contrive to be very often together, except there is something considerable given up by one or the other. And I think Christians ought to be very cautious what concessions they make upon this account. But, as I said at the beginning, no general positive rules can be laid down.

I have simply given your Lordship such thoughts as have occurred to me while writing, without study and without coherence. I dare not be dogmatical, but I think what I have written is agreeable both to particular texts and to the general tenor of scripture. I submit it to your judgment.

M Y L O R D,

I O W E your Lordship a quire of letters, for the favor and pleasure of your late visit—and therefore I must begin and write away.

I have lately read Robertson's History of Charles V. which, like most other histories, I consider as a comment upon those passages of scripture, which teach us, the depravity of man, the deceitfulness of the heart, the ruinous effects of sin, and the powerful though secret rule of Divine Providence, moving, directing, controlling the designs and actions of men, with an unerring hand, to the accomplishment of his own purposes, both of mercy and judgment. Without the clue and the light which the word of God affords, the history of mankind, of any, of every age, only presents to view a labyrinth and a chaos; a detail of wickedness and misery to make us tremble, and a confused jumble of interfering incidents, as destitute of stability, connection or order, as the clouds which fly over our heads. In this view, Delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi, may serve as a motto to all the histories I have seen. But with the scripture key, all is plain, all is instructive. Then I see, verily there is a God who governs the earth, who pours contempt upon princes, takes the wise in their own craftiness, over-rules the wrath and pride of man, to bring his own designs to pass;

and restrains all that is not necessary to that end, blasting the best concerted enterprizes at one time, by means apparently slight, and altogether unexpected, and at other times producing the most important events, from instruments and circumstances, which are at first thought too feeble and trivial to deserve notice. I should like to see a writer of Dr. Robertson's abilities give us a history upon this plan, but I think his reflections of this sort, are too general, too cold and too few——

What an empty Phantom, do the great men of the world pursue——while they wage war with the peace of mankind, and butcher (in the course of their lives) perhaps hundreds of thousands, to maintain the shadow of authority over distant nations, whom they can reach with no other influence than that of oppression and devastation. But when we consider those, who are sacrificed to their ambition, as justly suffering for their sins, then Heroes and Conquerors appear in their proper light, and worthy to be classed with earthquakes and pestilences, as instruments of Divine Vengeance. So many cares, so much pains, so many mischiefs——merely to support the idea a worm has formed of his own grandeur, is a proof that man by nature is not only depraved, but infatuated. Permit me to present my thoughts to more advantage in the words of M. Nicole :——

“ Un Grand dans son idée n'est pas un seul homme ; c'est un homme environné de tous ceux qui sont à lui, & qui s'imagine avoir autant de bras qu'ils en ont tous ensemble, parce qu'il en dispose & qu'il les remue. Un General d'armée se représente présente toujours à lui-même, au milieu de tous ses soldats. Ainsi chacun tâche d'occuper le plus de place qu'il peut dans son imagination, & l'on ne se pousse, & ne s'agrandit dans le monde, que pour augmenter l'idée que chacun se forme de soi-même. Voilà le but de tous les desirs ambitieux des hommes ! Alexandre & César n'ont point eu d'autre vue dans toutes leurs batailles que celle-là. Et si l'on demande pourquoi le Grand Seigneur a fait depuis peu périr cent mille hommes devant Candie, on peut répondre sûrement, que ce n'est que pour attacher encore à cette image intérieure qu'il a de lui-même, le titre de Conquerant." *

How awful is the case of those who live and die in such a spirit, and who have multiplied miseries upon their fellow-creatures in order to support and feed it. Perhaps they may, upon their entrance on another state, be accosted by multitudes, to the purport of that sarcastical language in the Prophet's sublime ode of triumph over the King of Babylon, Isa. xiv. 5—17.

*Hic est, quem Fuga, quem Pavor
Præcessit? hic, quem terricolis gravem
Strages secuta est, Vastitas que? hic
Attoniti spoliator orbis?*

But though the effects of this principle of self, are more extensive and calamitous, in proportion as those who are governed by it are more elevated; the principle itself is deep-rooted in every heart, and is the spring of every action, till grace infuses

a new principle, and self, like Dagon, falls before the Lord of Hosts. Great and small are but relative terms, and the passions of discontent, pride and envy, which, in the breast of a Potentate, are severely felt by one half of Europe, exert themselves with equal strength in the heart of a peasant, though for want of materials and opportunities, their operations are confined within narrow bounds. We are fallen into a state of gross idolatry, and self is the idol we worship.

The REV. MR. S—.

DEAR SIR,

I HAVE met with interruptions till now, or you would have heard from me sooner. My thoughts have run much upon the subject of your last, because I perceive it has a near connection with your peace. Your integrity greatly pleases me; far be it from me to shake the principle of your conduct. Yet, in the application, I think there is a possibility of carrying your exceptions too far.

From the account you give me of your sentiments, I cannot but wonder you find it so difficult to accede to the Athanasian Creed, when it seems to me you believe and avow what that creed chiefly sets forth. The doctrine of the Trinity, some explication of the terms being subjoined, is the Catholic Faith, without the belief of which a man cannot be saved. This damnatory clause seems to me proved by Mark xvi. 16. He that believeth shall be saved, &c. The object of faith must be truth. The doctrine of the Deity of Christ and of the Holy Spirit in union

with the Father, so that they are not three Gods but one God, is not merely a proposition expressed in words to which our assent is required, but is absolutely necessary to be known, since without it no one truth respecting salvation can be rightly understood; no one promise duly believed; no one duty spiritually performed. I take it for granted, that this doctrine must appear irrational and absurd in the eye of reason, if by reason we mean the reason of man in his fallen state, before it is corrected and enlightened by an heavenly Teacher. No man can say Jesus is Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. I believe with you that a man may be saved who never heard of the Creed, who never read any book but the New Testament, or perhaps a single Evangelist; but he must be taught of God the things that accompany salvation, or I do not think he can be saved. The mercies of God in Christ will not save any (as I apprehend) but according to the method revealed in his word, that is, those who are truly partakers of faith and holiness. For as the religion of the New Testament ascribes all power to God, and considers all goodness in us as the effect of his communication, we being by nature destitute of spiritual life or light, so those whom God himself is pleased to teach, will infallibly attain the knowledge of all that they are concerned to know. This teaching you are waiting for, and it shall be given you, yea the Lord, I trust, has begun to teach you already; but if you consider yourself as a learner, and that it is possible, under the Spirit's increasing illumination, you may hereafter adopt some things which at present you cannot approve; I should think

think it too early as yet, to prescribe to yourself rules and determinations for the government of your future life. Should the will of God appoint you a new path for service, he may, sooner than you are aware, quiet your mind, and enable you to subscribe with as full a persuasion of mind, as you now object to subscription. If it depended upon me, I could be content that the Creed should rest at the bottom of the sea, rather than embarrass a single person of your disposition. Nor am I a warm stickler for subscription in itself, but something of this kind seems necessary upon the supposition of an establishment.

When I think of an inclosure, some hedge, wall, bank, ditch, &c. is of course included in my idea; for who can conceive of an inclosure without a boundary? So in a National Church, there must be I apprehend something marked out, the approbation or refusal of which will determine who do or do not belong to it. And for this purpose articles of some kind seem not improper. You think it would be better to have these articles in scriptural expressions. But if it be lawful to endeavor to exclude from our pulpits men who hold sentiments the most repugnant to the truth, I wish you to consider, whether this can be in any measure secured by articles in which the scripture doctrines are not explained and stated as well as expressed. This proposal is strenuously pleaded for by many in our day, upon views very different from yours. The Socinians, for instance, would readily subscribe a scriptural declaration of the high priesthood, atonement and intercession of Christ, (while they are allowed to put their own sense upon the terms) though the sense they maintain be utterly inconsistent with what those who are enlightened by the Holy Spirit learn from the same expressions.

I acknowledge, indeed; that the end is not answered by the present method; since there are too many like the person you mention, who would easily subscribe 900 articles, rather than baulk his ferment: yet the profligacy of some seems to be no just reason why the Church, why any Church, should not be at liberty to define the terms upon which they will accept members or teachers, or why conscientious persons should object to these terms (if they think them agreeable to the truth) merely because they are not expressed in the precise words of scripture. If allowance may be made for human infirmity in the Liturgy, I see not why the Articles may not be intitled to the same privilege. For it seems requisite, that we should be as well satisfied with the expressions we use with our lips, in frequent solemn prayer to God, as in what we subscribe with our hands. I am persuaded that the leaders of the Association at the Feathers Tavern, some of them at least, though they begin with the affair of subscription, would not (if they might have their wish) stop there, but would go on with their projected reform, till they had overturned the Liturgy also, or at least weeded it from every expression that bears testimony to the Deity of the Savior, and the efficacious influence of the Holy Spirit. I bless God that you are far otherwise minded.

I hope however, though you should not think yourself at liberty to repeat your subscription, the
Lord

Lord will make you comfortable and useful in your present rank as a Curate. Preferment is not necessary either to our peace or usefulness. We may live and die contentedly, without the honors and emoluments, which aspiring men thirst after, if he be pleased to honor us with a dispensation to preach his gospel, and to crown our endeavours with a blessing. He that winneth souls is wise. Wise in the choice of the highest end he can propose to himself in this life, wise in the improvement of the only means, by which this desirable end can be attained. Wherever we cast our eyes, the bulk of the people are ignorant, immoral, careless. They live without God in the world. They are neither awed by his authority, or affected by his goodness, or enabled to trust to his promises, or disposed to aim at his glory. If perhaps they have a serious interval, or some comparative sobriety of character, they ground their hopes upon their own doings, endeavors or purposes, and treat the inexpressible love of God revealed in Christ, and the gospel method of salvation by faith in his name, with neglect, often with contempt. They have preachers whom perhaps they hear with some pleasure, because they neither alarm their consciences by insisting on the spirituality and sanction of the Divine Law, nor offend their pride by publishing the humiliating doctrines of that gospel, which is the power of God through faith unto salvation. Therefore what they do speak, they speak in vain; the world grows worse and worse under their instructions, infidelity and profligacy abound more and more, for God will own no other doctrine but what

what the Apostle calls the truth as it is in Jesus. That doctrine which drives the sinner from all his vain pleas, and points out the Lord Jesus Christ as the only ground of hope, the supreme object of desire, as appointed of God, to be wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, to all who believe in his name. When ministers themselves are convinced of sin, and feel the necessity of an Almighty Savior, they presently account their former gain but loss, and determine, with the Apostle, to know nothing but Jesus Christ, and him crucified. In proportion as they do this, they are sure to be wondered at, laughed at and railed at, if the providence of God and the constitution of their country secure them from severer treatment.—But they have this invaluable compensation, that they no longer speak without effect. In a greater or less degree a change takes place in their auditories—the blind receive their sight, the deaf hear, the lepers are cleansed—sinners are turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God. Sinful practices are forsaken, and a new course of life in the converts, evidences that they have not followed cunningly devised fables, or taken up with uncertain notions, but that God has indeed quickened them by his Spirit, and given them an understanding to know him that is true. The preachers likewise, while they attempt to teach others, are taught themselves. A blessing descends upon their studies and labors, upon their perusal of the scripture, upon their attention to what passes within them and around them. The events of every day contribute to throw light upon the word of God, their

their views of divine truth grow more enlarged, connected and comprehensive. Many difficulties, which perplexed them at their first setting out, trouble them no more. The God whom they serve, and on whom they wait, reveals to them those great things, which, though plainly expressed in the letter of the scripture, cannot be understood and realized without divine teaching, 1 Cor. ii. v. 9—15. Thus they go on from strength to strength, hard things become easy, and a divine light shines upon their paths. Opposition from men perhaps may increase, they may expect to be represented as those who turn the world upside down. The cry μεγαλη η Αρτεμις * will be raised against them, the gates of the temple of preferment will be seldom open to them, but they will have the unspeakable consolation of applying to themselves those lively words of the Apostle, ως λυπημενοι, αιει δε χαιροντες· ως πτωχοι, πολλας δε πλαστιζοντες· ως μηδεν εχοντες, και παντα κατεχοντες. †

It is the strain of evident sincerity which runs through your letters, that gives me a pleasing confidence the Lord is with you. A disinterested desire of knowing the truth, with a willingness to follow it through all disadvantages, is a preparation of the heart which only God can give. He has directed you to the right method, searching the scripture with prayer. Go on, and may his blessing attend you; you may see from what I have written above, what is the desire of my heart for you. But I am not impatient. Follow your heavenly leader, and in his own time and manner he will make your way plain. I have travelled the path before you, I see what you yet want, I cannot impart it to you, but he can and I trust he will. It will rejoice my soul to be any way assistant to you, but I am afraid I should not afford you much, either profit or satisfaction, by entering upon a dry defence of Creeds and Articles.

The truths of scripture are not like mathematical theorems, which present exactly the same ideas to every person who understands the terms. The word of God is compared to a mirror, 2 Cor. iii. 18. But it is a mirror in which the longer we look the more we see; the view will be still growing upon us, and still we shall see but in part, while on this side eternity. When our Lord pronounced Peter blessed, declaring he had learnt that which flesh and blood could not have taught him, yet Peter was at that time much in the dark. The sufferings and death of Jesus, though the only and necessary means of his salvation, were an offence to him. But he lived to glory in what he once could not bear to hear of. Peter had received grace to love the Lord Jesus, to follow him, to venture all, and to forsake all for him: these first good dispositions were of God, and they led to further advances. So it is still. By nature Self rules in the heart; when this idol is brought low, and we are truly willing to be the Lord's, and to apply to him for strength and direction, that we may serve him, the good work is begun; for it is a truth that holds universally and without exception, a man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. The Lord first finds us when we are thinking of something else, Isaiab. lxx. 1. And then we begin to seek him in good earnest, and he has promised to be found of us. People may, by industry and natural abilities, make themselves masters of the external evidences of Christianity, and have much to say for and against different schemes and systems of sentiments; but all this while the heart remains untouched. True religion is not a science of the head, so much as an inward and heart-felt perception, which casts down imaginations, and every υψωματα that exalteth itself in the mind, and brings every thought into a sweet and willing subjection to Christ by faith. Here the learned have no real advantage above the ignorant, both see when the eyes of the understanding are enlightened, till then both are equally blind. And the first lesson in the school of Christ, is to become a little child, sitting simply at his feet, that we may be made wise unto salvation.

I was not only prevented beginning my letter so soon as I wished, but have been unusually interrupted since I began it. Often as soon as I could well take the pen in hand, I have been called away to attend company and intervening business. Though I persuade myself, after what I have formerly said, you will put a favorable construction upon my delay, yet it has given me some pain. I set a great value upon your offer of friendship, which I trust will not be interrupted on either side, by the freedom with which we mutually express our difference of sentiments, when we are constrained to differ. You please me with entrusting me with the first rough draught of your thoughts, and you may easily perceive by my manner of writing, that I place equal confidence in your candor. I shall be glad to exchange letters as often as it suits us, without constraint, ceremony or apology; and may he who is always present with our hearts make our correspondence useful. I pray God to be your sun and shield, your light and strength, to guide you with his eye, to comfort you with his gracious presence in your own soul, and to make you an happy instrument of comforting many.

I am, with great sincerity,

Dear Sir, &c.

LETTER II.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Gladly adopt your address, and can assure you that the interchange of every letter unites my heart more closely to you. I am glad to find that your views of Articles and Creeds are not likely to hinder you from going forward in your present situation; and if, without contracting your usefulness, they only prove a bar to your preferment, I am sure it will be no grief of mind to you at the hour of death or the day of judgment, that you were enabled to follow the dictates of conscience, in opposition to all the pleas of custom or interest. Since, therefore, I have no desire of shaking your resolves, may we not drop this subject entirely? For indeed I act but an aukward part in it, being by no means myself an admirer of Articles and Creeds, or disposed to be a warm advocate for Church Power. The propriety of our national establishment, or of any other, is what I have not much to do with; I found it as it is, nor have I influence to alter it, were I willing. The question in which I was concerned, was simply, Whether I, rebus sic stantibus, could submit to it, so as conscientiously to take a designation to the ministry under it? I thought I could, I accordingly did, and I am thankful that I never have seen cause to repent it.

You seem gently to charge me with a want of candor in what I observed or apprehended, concerning the Gentlemen of the Feathers Tavern. If I mistake not (for I retain no copies of my letters) I expressed myself with a double restriction, by first saying the leaders of that society, and then adding, or some of them at least. I apprehend your candor will hardly lead you to suppose that there are none amongst them who would pull down the whole fabric (that is I mean so far as it crosses the Socinian scheme) if it was left to their choice. I apprehend I may, without the least breach of candor, suppose that the exceptions which Mr. Lindsay has made to the Liturgy, are not peculiar to himself. It seems plain in his case, and from his own writings, that the mere removal of subscriptions, which is the immediate and ostensible object of the clerical petition, could not have satisfied him. And it is past a doubt with me, that there are others of the clergy like-minded with him. Indeed I could wish to be thought candid by you. Though I confess I am not a friend to that lukewarmness and indifference for truth, which bears the name of candor among many in the present day. I desire to maintain a spirit of candor and benevolence to all men, to wish them well, to do them every good office in my power, and to commend what appears to me commendable in a Socinian, as readily as in a Calvinist. But with some people I can only go usque ad aras. I must judge of principles by the word of God, and of the tree by its fruit. I meddle with no man's final state, because I know that he who is exalted to give repentance and remission of sins, can do it whenever and to whomsoever he is pleased. — Yet I firmly believe, and I make no scruple of proclaiming it, that swearers, drunkards, adulterers, continuing such, cannot inherit the kingdom of God. And I look with no less compassion upon some persons whose characters in common life may be respectable, when I see them unhappily blinded by their own wisdom, and while they account themselves, and are accounted by many others master-builders in Zion, rejecting the only foundation upon which a sinner's hope can be safely built.

I am far from thinking the Socinians all hypocrites, but I think they are all in a most dangerous error; nor do their principles exhibit to my view, a whit more of the genuine fruits of Christianity than Deism itself. You say, "If they be sincere, and fail not for want of diligence in searching, I cannot help thinking that God will not condemn them for an inevitable defect in their understandings." Indeed, my friend, I have such a low opinion of man in his depraved state, that I believe no one has real sincerity in religious matters till God bestows it. And when he makes a person sincere in his desires after truth, he will assuredly guide him to the possession of it in due time, as our Lord speaks, John vi. 44, 45. To suppose that any persons can sincerely seek the way of salvation, and yet miss it through an inevitable defect of their understandings, would contradict the plain promises of the gospel, such as Matt. vii. 7, 8. John vii. 16, 17. But to suppose that nothing is necessary to be known, which some persons who profess sincerity cannot receive, would be in effect to make the scripture a nose of wax, and open a wide door for scepticism. I am not a judge of the heart, but I may be sure that whoever makes the foundation stone a rock of offence, cannot be sincere in his enquiries. He may study the scripture accurately, but he brings his own pre-conceived sentiments with him, and instead of submitting them to the touchstone of truth, he makes them a rule by which he interprets. That they who lean to their own understandings should stumble and miscarry I cannot wonder, for the same God who has promised to fill the hungry with good things, has threatened to send the rich empty away. So Matt. xi. 25. It is not through defect of understanding, but a want of simplicity and humility, that so many stumble like the blind at noon-day, and can see nothing of those great truths which are written in the gospel as with a sun beam.

You wish me to explain myself concerning the doctrine of the Trinity. I will try, yet I know I cannot, any farther than as he who taught me, shall be pleased to bear witness in your heart to what I say. My first principle in Religion is what the scripture teaches me of the utter depravity of human nature, in connection with the spirituality and sanction of the law of God. I believe we are by nature sinners, by practice universally transgressors; that we are dead in trespasses and sins, and that the bent of our natural spirit is enmity against the holiness, government and grace of God. Upon this ground, I see, feel and acknowledge the necessity of such a salvation as the gospel proposes, which at the same time that it precludes boasting, and stains the pride of all human glory, affords encouragement to those who may be thought, or who may think themselves, the weakest or the vilest of mankind. I believe that whatever notions a person may take up from education or system, no one ever did or ever will feel himself and own himself to be such a lost, miserable, hateful sinner, unless he be powerfully and supernaturally convinced by the Spirit of God.— There is, when God pleases, a certain light thrown into the soul, which differs not merely in degree, but in kind, toto genere, from any thing that can be effected or produced by moral suasion or argument. But (to take in another of your queries) the Holy Spirit teaches or reveals no new truths either of doctrine or precept, but only enables us to understand what is already revealed in the scripture. Here a change takes place, the person that was spiritually blind begins to see. The sinner's character, as described in the word of God, he finds to be a description of himself, that he is afar off, a stranger, a rebel, that he has hitherto lived in vain. Now he begins to see the necessity of an atonement, an advocate, a shepherd, a comforter: he can no more trust to his own wisdom, strength and goodness; but, accounting all his former gain but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, he renounces every other refuge, and ventures his all upon the person, work and promise of the Redeemer. In this way, I say, he will find the doctrine of the Trinity not only a proposition, but a principle; that is, from his own wants and situation he will have an abiding conviction, that the Son and Holy Spirit are God, and must be possessed of the attributes and powers of Deity, to support the offices the scriptures assign them, and to deserve the confidence and worship, the scriptures require to be placed in them, them, and paid to them. Without this awakened state of mind, a Divine, reputed orthodox, will blunder wretchedly even in defending his own opinions. I have seen labored defences of the Trinity, which have given me not much more satisfaction, than I should probably receive from a dissertation upon the rainbow, composed by a man blind from his birth. In effect, the knowledge of God, cannot be attained by studious discussion on our parts; it must be by a revelation on his part, Matt. xi. 27. and ch. xvi. 17. A revelation, not objectively of new truth, but subjectively of new light in us. Then he that runs may read. Perhaps you may not quite understand my meaning, or not accede to my sentiment at present; I have little doubt however but the time is coming when you will. I believe the Lord God has given you that sincerity, which he never disappoints.

Far be it from me to arrogate infallibility to myself, or to any writer or preacher. Yet, blessed be God, I am not left to float up and down the uncertain tide of opinion, in those points wherein the peace of my soul is nearly concerned. I know, yea I infallibly knew whom I have believed. I am under no more doubt about the way of salvation than of the way to London. I cannot be deceived, because the word of God cannot deceive me. It is impossible however for me to give you or any person full satisfaction concerning my evidence, because it is of an experimental nature. Rev. ii. 17. In general, it arises from the views I have received of the power, compassion and grace of Jesus, and a consciousness, that I, from a conviction of my sin

and misery, have fled to him for refuge, entrusted and devoted my self and my all to him. Since my mind has been enlightened, every thing within me, and every thing around me, confirms and explains to me what I read in scripture; and though I have reason enough to distrust my own judgment every hour, yet I have no reason to question the great essentials, which the Lord himself hath taught me.

Besides a long letter, I send you a great book. A part of it (for I do not task you to read the whole) may perhaps explain my meaning better than I have leisure to do myself. I set a high value upon this book of Mr. Halyburton's, so that unless I could replace it with another, I know not if I would part with it for its weight in gold. The first and longest treatise is, in my judgment, a masterpiece. But I would chiefly wish you to peruse the Essay concerning Faith, towards the close of the book. I need not beg you to read it carefully, and to read it all. The importance of the subject, its immediate connection with your enquiries, and the accuracy of the reasoning, will render the motive of my request unnecessary. I cannot stile him a very elegant writer, and being a Scotsman, he abounds with the Scottish idiom. But you will prefer truth to ornament. I long to hear your opinion of it. It seems to me, so adapted to some things that have passed between us, as if written on purpose.

The Enquiry concerning Regeneration and Justification, which stands last in the book, I do not desire or even wish you to read. But if you should, and then think that you have read a speculation more curious than useful, I shall not contradict you. I think it must appear to you in that light—but it was bound up with the rest, and therefore could not stay behind; but I hope the Essay on Faith will please you.

I take great pleasure in your correspondence, still more in the thought of your friendship, which I hope to cultivate to the utmost, and to approve myself, sincerely and affectionately yours.

LETTER III.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

NEXT week I go to London, where I purpose (if nothing unforeseen prevents) to stay a month. Many things, which must necessarily be attended to before my departure, abridge me of that leisure which I could wish to employ in answering your last. However I will spare you what I can. I thank you for yours. Your objections neither displease nor weary me.—While truth is the object of your enquiry, the more freedom you use with me the better. Nor do they surprise me, for I have formerly made the like objections myself. I have stood upon your ground, and I continue to hope you will one day stand upon mine. As I have told you more than once I do not mean to dictate to you, or to wish you to receive any thing upon my ipse dixit, but in the simplicity of friendship, I will give you my thoughts from time to time upon the points you propose, and leave the event to the divine blessing.

I am glad you do not account the Socinians master-builders. However they esteem themselves so, and are so esteemed, not only by a few (as you think) but by many. I fear Socinianism spreads rapidly amongst us, and bids fair to be the prevailing scheme in this land, especially with those who profess to be the thinking part. The term Arminian, as at present applied, is very indiscriminate, and takes in a great variety of persons and sentiments, amongst whom, I believe, there are many who hold the fundamental truths of the gospel, and live a life of faith in the Son of God. I am far from supposing that God will guide every sincere person exactly to adopt all my sentiments. But there are some sentiments which I believe essential to the very state and character of a true Christian—And these make him a Christian, not merely by being his acknowledged sentiments, but by a certain peculiar manner in which he possesses them. There is a certain important change takes place in the heart, by the operation of the Spirit of God, before the soundest and most orthodox sentiments can have their proper influence upon us. This work, or change, the scripture describes by various names, each of which is designed to teach us the marvellous effects it produces, and the almighty power by which it is produced. It is sometimes called a new-birth, John iii. 3. Sometimes a new-creature or new-creation, as 2 Cor. v. 17. Sometimes the causing light to shine out of darkness, 2 Cor. iv. 6. Sometimes the opening the eyes of the blind, Acts xxvi. 18. Sometimes the raising the dead to life, Ephes. ii. 5. Till a person has experienced this change, he will be at a loss to form a right conception of it. But it means, not being proselyted to an opinion, but receiving a principle of divine life and light in the soul. And till this is received the things of God, the truths of the gospel cannot be rightly discerned or understood by the utmost powers of fallen man, who with all his wisdom, reason and talents, is still but what the Apostle calls the natural man, till the power of God visits his heart, 1 Cor. ii. 14. This work is sometimes wrought suddenly, as in the case of Lydia, Acts xvi. 14. At other times very gradually. A person who before was a stranger even to the form of godliness, or at best content with a mere form—finds new thoughts arising in his mind, feels some concern about his sins, some desire to please God, some suspicions that all is not right.—He examines his views of religion, hopes the best of them, and yet cannot rest satisfied in them. To-day, perhaps, he thinks himself fixed; to-morrow he will be all uncertainty. He enquires of others, weighs, measures, considers, meets with sentiments which he had not attended to, thinks them plausible, but is presently shocked with objections or supposed consequences, which he finds himself unable to remove. As he goes on in his enquiry, his difficulties increase. New doubts arise in his mind, even the scriptures perplex him, and appear to assert contrary things. He would sound the depths of truth by the plummet of his reason, but he finds his line is too short. Yet even now the man is under a guidance, which will at length lead him right. The importance of the subject takes up his thoughts, and takes off the relish he once had for the things of the world: He reads, he prays, he strives, he resolves; sometimes inward embarrassments and outward temptations bring him to his wit's-end. He almost wishes to stand where he is, and enquire no more. But he cannot stop—At length he begins to feel the inward depravity, which he had before owned as an opinion; a sense of sin and guilt cut him out new work. Here reasoning will stand him in no stead. This is a painful change of mind, but it prepares the way for a blessing. It silences some objections better than a thousand arguments, it cuts the comb of his own wisdom and attainments, it makes him weary of working for life, and teaches him, in God's due time, the meaning of that text, To him that worketh not, but believeth in him who justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. Then he learns, that scriptural faith is a very different thing from a rational assent to the gospel—that it is the immediate gift of God, Ephes. ii. 8. The operation of God, Col. ii. 12. That Christ is not only the object, but the author and finisher of faith, Heb. xii. 2. And that faith is not so properly a part of that obedience we owe to God, as an inestimable benefit we receive from him for Christ's sake, Phil. i. 29. which is the medium of our justification, Rom. v. 1. And the principle by which we are united to Christ (as the branch to the vine) John xvii. 21. I am well aware of the pains taken to put a different sense upon these and other seemingly mysterious passages of scripture. But thus far we speak that which we know, and testify that which we have seen. I have described a path in which I have known many led, and in which I have walked myself.

The gospel, my dear sir, is a salvation appointed for those who are ready to perish, and is not designed to put them in a way to save themselves by their own works. It speaks to us as condemned already, and calls upon us to believe in a crucified Savior, that we may receive redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of our sins. And the Spirit of God, by the gospel, first convinces us of unbelief, sin and misery, and then by revealing the things of Jesus to our minds, enables us, as helpless sinners, to come to Christ, to receive him, to behold him, or in other words to believe in him, and expect pardon, life and grace from him; renouncing every hope and aim in which we once rested, and accounting all things loss and dung for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, John vi. 35. Isa. xlv. 22. with John vi. 40. Col. ii. 6. In some of Omicron's letters you will find my thoughts more at large upon these subjects, than I have now time to write them. For a farther illustration I refer you to the MSS. sent herewith. The first part, written in short-hand, does not so immediately concern our present point as the second, which you may read without a key. It relates a matter of indisputable fact, concerning a person with whom (as you will perceive) I was well acquainted. You may depend upon the truth of every tittle. I intrust it to you in the confidence of friendship, and beg that it may not go out of your hands, and that when you have perused it, you would return it, sealed up, by a safe conveyance to my house. You will see in it the sentiments of a man of great learning, sound reasoning, an amiable and irreproachable character, and how little he accounted of all these advantages, when the Lord was pleased to enlighten his mind.

Though we have not exactly the same view of human depravity, yet as we both agree to take our measure of it from the word of God, I trust we shall not always differ about it. Adam was created in the image of God, in righteousness and true holiness, Ephes. iv. 24. This moral image, I believe, was totally lost by sin. In that sense he died the day, the moment he eat the forbidden fruit. God was no longer his joy and delight, he was averse from the thoughts of his presence, and would (if possible) have hid himself from him. His natural powers, though doubtless impaired, were not destroyed. Man by nature is still capable of great things. His understanding, reason, memory, imagination, &c. sufficiently proclaim that the hand that made him is divine. He is, as Milton says of Beelzebub, majestic though in ruins. He can reason, invent, and by application attain a considerable knowledge in natural things. The exertions of human genius, as specified in the characters of some philosophers, poets, orators, &c. are wonderful. But man cannot know, love, trust or serve his Maker, unless he be renewed in the spirit of his mind. God has preserved in him likewise some feelings of benevolence, pity, some sense of natural justice and truth, &c. without which there could be no society; but these I apprehend are little more than instincts, by which the world is kept in some small degree of order; but being under the direction of pride and self, do not deserve the name of virtue and goodness, because the exercise of them does not spring from a principle of love to God, nor is directed to his glory, or regulated by the rule of his word, till a principle of grace is superadded. You think, I will not say, “that God judicially in punishment of one man’s sin, added these corruptions to all his posterity.”

posterity." Let us suppose, that the punishment annexed to eating the forbidden fruit, had been the loss of Adam's rational powers, and that he should be degraded to the state and capacity of a brute. In this condition, had he begotten children after the fall in his own likeness, his nature being previously changed they must have been of course brutes like himself; for he could not convey to them, those original powers which he had lost. Will this illustrate my meaning? Sin did not deprive him of rationality but of spirituality. His nature became earthly, sensual, yea devilish; and this fallen nature, this carnal mind, which is enmity against God, which is not subject to his law, neither indeed can be, Rom. viii. 7. we universally derive from him. Look upon children, they presently shew themselves averse from good, but exceedingly propense to evil. This they can learn even without a master, but ten thousand instructors and instructions cannot instil good into them, so as to teach them to love their Creator, unless a divine power co-operates. Just as it is with the earth, which produces weeds spontaneously, but if you only see a cabbage or an apple-tree, you are sure it was planted or sown there, and did not spring from the soil. I know many hard questions may be started upon this subject, but the Lord in due time will clear his own cause, and vindicate his own ways. I leave all difficulties with him. It is sufficient for me that scripture asserts and experience proves that it is thus in fact, Rom. iii. 9—21. Job. xiv. 4. Thus we have not only forfeited our happiness by transgression, but are by our depravity incapable of it, and have no more desire or taste for such a state as the scripture describes heaven to be, than a man born deaf can have for a concert of music. And therefore our Lord declares, that except a man be born again, he not only shall not, but cannot see the kingdom of God. Hence a two-fold necessity of a Savior—his blood for the pardon of our sins—his life, spirit and grace to quicken our souls, and form us anew for himself, that we may feel his love and shew forth his praise.

St. Paul, before his conversion, was not sincere in the sense I hope you to be: he thought himself in the right without doubt, as many have done when they killed God's servants, John xvi. 2. He was blindly and obstinately zealous: I think he did not enter into the merits of the cause, or enquire into facts with that attention which sincerity would have put him upon. You think that his sincerity and zeal were the very things that made him a chosen instrument; he himself speaks of them as the very things that made him peculiarly unworthy of that honor, 1 Cor. xv. 9. And he tells us that he was set forth as a pattern of the Lord's long-suffering and mercy, that the very chief of sinners might be encouraged, 1 Tim. i. 15, 16. Had he been sincerely desirous to know whether Jesus was the Messiah, there was enough in his character, doctrines, miracles and the prophecies concerning him, to have cleared up the point. But he took it for granted he was right in his opinion, and hurried blindly on, and was (as he said himself) exceedingly mad against them. Such a kind of sincerity is common enough. People believe themselves themselves right; and therefore treat others with scorn or rage; appeal to the scriptures, but first lay down their own pre-conceived sentiments for truths, and then examine what scriptures they can find to countenance them. Surely a person's thinking himself right; will not give a sanction to all that he does under that persuasion.

Ignorance and obstinacy are in themselves sinful, and no plea of sincerity will exempt from the danger of being under their influence, Isa. xxvii. 11. Luke vi. 39. It appears to me, that though you will not follow any man implicitly, you are desirous of discovering your mistakes, supposing you are mistaken in any point of importance. You read and examine the word of God, not to find arms wherewith to defend your sentiments at all events, but to know whether they are defensible or not. You pray for God's light and teaching, and in this search you are willing to risque what men are commonly much afraid of hazarding—character, interest, preferment, favor, &c. A sincerity of this kind I too seldom meet with; when I do I account it a token for good, and am ready to say, “No man can do this, except God be with him.” However, sincerity is not conversion. But I believe it is always a forerunner of it.

I would not be uncharitable and censorious, hasty and peremptory in judging my fellow-creatures. But if I acknowledge the word of God, I cannot avoid forming my judgment upon it. It is true, I cannot look into people's hearts; but hearts and principles are delineated to my hand in the scripture. I read that no murderer has eternal life in him; I read, likewise, if any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema—And therefore I conclude, that there are speculative errors as heinous in their guilt, as destructive in their effects as murder; and that the most moral regular man, as to social life, if he loves not the Lord Jesus Christ, is in the sight of God, the Judge of all, as displeasing as a murderer. It has pleased God, for the peace and support of society, to put a black mark upon those sins which affect the peace and welfare of our neighbor, such as adultery and murder. But undoubtedly the sins committed immediately against himself, must be more heinous than any which offend our fellow-creatures. The second commandment, Matt. xxii. 39. is like the first, but it depends upon it, and is therefore inferior to it—Men ordinarily judge otherwise. To live regardless of God and the gospel, is looked upon as a peccadillo in comparison with offences against society. But sooner or later it will appear otherwise to all. A parcel of robbers may pique themselves upon the justice, honor and truth they observe towards one another; but because they set up a petty interest, which is inconsistent with the public good, they are deservedly accounted villains and treated as such, notwithstanding their petty morality among themselves. Now such a company of robbers bears a much greater proportion to a whole nation, than a nation or all the nations of the earth bears to the great God. Our dependance upon him is absolute, our obligations to him infinite. In vain shall men plead their moral discharge of relative duties to each other, if they fail in the unspeakable greater relation, under which they stand to God. And therefore, when I see people living without God in the world, as all do till they are converted; I cannot but judge them in a dangerous state—not because I take pleasure in censuring, or think myself authorized to pass sentence upon my fellow-creature, but because the scripture decides expressly on the case, and I am bound to take my sentiments from thence.

The jailor was certainly a Christian when baptized, as you observe. He trembled; he cried out, What must I do to be saved? Paul did not bid him amend his life, but believe in the Lord Jesus—He believed and rejoiced. But the Lord blessed the Apostle's words to produce in him that saving faith, which filled him with joy and peace. It was, as I observed before, something more than an assent to the proposition that Jesus is the Christ; a resting in him for forgiveness and acceptance, and a cleaving to him in love. No other faith will purify the heart, work by love and overcome the world.

I need not have pleaded want of leisure as an excuse for a short letter, for I have written a long one. I feel myself much interested in your concerns—And your unexpected frank application to me (though you well know the light in which I appear to some people) I consider as a providential call, which binds me to your service. I hope our correspondence will be productive of happy effects, and that we shall both one day rejoice in it.

I am, Dear Sir,

Aug. 11, 1775. Your sincere friend and servant.

LETTER IV.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Begin to fear I shall fall under a suspicion of unkindness and forgetfulness towards you—and therefore, I am willing to write a line by way of prevention, though I have not leisure to attempt any thing like an answer to the letter you put into my hand, the evening before I left O——. Must therefore content myself with a tender of affection and respect, and an enquiry after your welfare.

Your letter will give me an opportunity of saying something farther when time shall admit. But an endeavor to answer all the objections, that may be started between us, in a way of reasoning, would require a volume, and would likewise interfere with the leading principle, upon which my hope of giving you satisfaction in due time is grounded. You seem to expect that I should remove your difficulties, but it is my part only to throw in a word occasionally, as a witness of what the Lord has been pleased to teach me from the scriptures, and to wait for the rest, till he, (who alone is able) shall be pleased to communicate the same views to you —For till we see and judge by the same medium, and are agreed in the fundamental point, that faith is not the effect of reasoning, but a special gift of God, which he bestows when, and to whom he pleases, it will not be possible for me to convince you by dint of argument. I believe, as I have observed served before, that he has already given you a desire to know his will, and therefore I trust he will not disappoint your search. At present I think you want one thing, which it is not in my power to impart. I mean such a sense of the depravity of human nature, and the state of all mankind considered as sinners, as may make you feel the utter impossibility of attaining to the peace and hope of the gospel, in any other way, than by renouncing all hope of succeeding by any endeavors of your own, farther than by humbly waiting at the throne of grace, for power to cast yourself, without terms and conditions, upon him who is able to save to the uttermost. We must feel ourselves sick, before we can duly prize the great physician, and feel a sentence of death in ourselves, before we can effectually trust in God who raiseth the dead.

I have not brought your sermons with me, for I thought I should not have time to read them attentively, while in this hurrying place. I purpose to consider them with care, and to give you my thoughts with frankness, when I return. However, if they are upon the plan intimated in your letter, I will venture to say one thing beforehand, that they will not answer your desired end. I am persuaded you wish to be useful—to reclaim sinners from their evil ways, to inspire them with a love to God, and a sincere aim to walk in obedience to his will. May I not venture to appeal to yourself, that you meet with little success? That the people to whom you preach, though they perhaps give you a patient hearing, yet remain as they were, unchanged and unholy. It must be so—there is

But one sort of preaching, which God blesses to these purposes—that which makes all the world guilty before God, and sets forth Jesus Christ, (as the brazen serpent was proposed by Moses) that guilty and condemned sinners, by looking to him and believing on his name, may be healed and saved. The most pressing exhortations to repentance and amendment of life, unless they are enforced in a certain way, which only God can teach, will leave our hearers much as they find them. When we meet, or when I have leisure to write from home, I will trouble you with my thoughts more at large. Till then, permit me to assure you of my sincere regard and best wishes, and that I am,

Dear Sir,

Your affectionate friend, &c.

LETTER V.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

THE calls and engagements, which I told you engrossed and anticipated my time, when I wrote last, have continued without any intermission hitherto, and I am still far behind-hand with my business. I am willing to hope, that the case has been much the same with you, and that want of leisure has been the only cause of my not having been pleased with so much as a note from you, since my return from London.

I am loath, for my own sake, to charge your silence, to any unwillingness of continuing that intercourse which I have been, and still find myself, desirous to improve on my part. For though we are not agreed in our views, yet while our preliminary agreement, to allow mutual freedom, and to exercise mutual candor, in expressing our sentiments, subsists, we may and I hope shall be glad to hear from each other. It may seem to intimate I have a better opinion of myself, than of you, that while I seem confident your freedom will not offend me; I feel now and then a fear, lest mine should prove displeasing to you. But friendship is a little suspicious when exercised with long silence, and a plain declaration of my sentiments has more than once put amiable and respectable persons to the full trial of their patience.

I now

I now return your Sermons; I thank you for the perusal, I see much in them that I approve, and nothing in them but what I formerly espoused. But in a course of years, a considerable alteration has taken place in my judgment and experience. I hope, yea, I may boldly say, I am sure, not for the worse. Then I was seeking, and now through mercy I have found, the pearl of great price. It is both the prayer and the hope of my heart, that a day is coming when you shall make the same acknowledgment; from your Letters and Sermons, I am encouraged to address you in our Lord's words, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." I am persuaded the views you have received, will not suffer you to remain where you are. But fidelity obliges me to add, "Yet one thing thou lackest." "That one thing" I trust the Lord will both shew you, and bestow upon you, in his due time. You speak somewhere of "Atoning for disobedience by repentance."—Ah, my dear Sir, when we are brought to estimate our disobedience, by comparing it with such a sense of the majesty, holiness and authority of God, and the spirituality, extent and sanction of his holy law, as he and he only can impress upon the heart of a sinner, we shall be convinced that nothing but the blood of the Son of God can atone for the smallest instance of disobedience.

I intimated in my Letter from London, one defect of your scheme, which will probably be the first to engage your notice. I am sure you have a desire to be useful to the souls of men, to be an instrument of reclaiming them from that course of open wickedness, or lifeless formality, in which you see them enslaved; and in a word, to prevail with them, to live soberly, righteously and godly, according to the just and comprehensive sense you have given of those words, in your Sermon on Tit. ii. 11, 12. Now inward experience, and a pretty extensive observation of what passes abroad, have so perfectly convinced me there is but one mode of preaching, which the Holy Spirit owns to the producing these effects; that I am not afraid to pronounce confidently, you will not have the desires of your heart gratified upon your present plan; the people will give you a hearing and remain just as they are, till the Lord leads you to speak to them as criminals condemned already, and whose first essential step it is to seek forgiveness by the blood of Jesus, and a change of heart and state, by his grace, before they can bring forth any fruit acceptable to God.

As I have little time for writing, and little hope of succeeding in a way of argumentation, I have substituted, instead of a longer letter, the heads of some Sermons I preached nine or ten years ago, on our Lord's discourse with Nicodemus. However, when I have heard that you are well, and that you are still disposed to correspond with me, I shall be ready to give a more particular answer to the subjects you pointed out to me, in the Letter you favored me with the day before I left London. I pray God to bless you in all your ways, and beg you to believe, that I am, with sincerity, &c.

LETTER VI.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

IT never entered my pericranium, that you expected I should fully and directly answer your Letter, while I was in London, and yet you reasonably might, as you knew nothing of my engagements; but indeed it was impracticable, I could only send you a hasty line, as a token that I remembered you; I informed you when I returned that I was just going out again; since I came home the second time, I have been engrossed by things that would admit of no delay, and at length, not having so much as a note from you, I thought I would wait till I heard farther. But from first to last it was my intention, and I think my promise, to answer in the manner you proposed, as soon as I could. And even now I must beg a little longer time.—Believe me, that as the wise and good providence of God brought us together, without any expectation of mine, I will do all in my power to preserve the connection, and particularly by giving my thoughts on such questions as you propose. And though to consider your questions in the manner you wish, and to point out the agreement of detached texts (as they occur) with my views, seems in prospect to require a volume rather than a sheet, yet I am not discouraged; only I beg you to make allowances for other things, and to be assured that that before I had the pleasure of corresponding with you, I had very little spare time. Expect then the best satisfaction I am able to give you, as soon as possible. To prepare the way I will try hard for a little leisure, to give you a few thoughts upon yours, which came last night.

You complain, that I have hitherto disappointed your expectations—If you have preserved my first papers, I believe you will find, that I apprised you this might probably be the event, and certainly must, unless it should please God to make what I should write a means of giving you the same views with myself. I only proposed as a witness, to bear a simple testimony to what I had seen and known. So far as you believed me sincere and unwilling to impose upon you, I thought you might admit, there was perhaps some weight in what I advanced, though for the present you could not see things in the same light. And if you allowed a possibility, that my changing the sentiments which I once held in common with yourself, might be upon sufficient grounds; you would, as I trust you do, wait upon the great Teacher for his instruction, otherwise I did not expect to convince you, nor do I yet, only I am glad to put myself in his hands as an instrument.

You quite misunderstood what I spoke of the light and influence of the Spirit of God. He reveals to me no new truths, but has only shewn me the meaning of his own written word; nor is this light a particular revelation, it is common to all who are born again. And thus though you and I cannot

fully agree about it, yet I almost daily meet with persons from the East, West, North and South, whom, though I never saw them before, I find we understand each other at once. This (as you bid me be explicit) is the one thing which I think you at present lack. And I limited my expression to one thing, because it is our Lord's expression, and because that one thing includes many. As I said before, I cannot give it you, but the Lord can; and from the desire he has raised in your heart, I have a warm hope that he will. You place the whole stress of your enquiries upon reason; I am far from discarding reason, when it is enlightened and sanctified, but spiritual things must be spiritually discerned, and can be received and discerned no other way, for to our natural reason they are foolishness. 1 Cor. ii. 14, 15. Matt. xi. 25. This certain something, I can no more describe to those who have not experienced it, than I could describe the taste of a Pine Apple to a person who had never seen one. But scriptural proofs might be adduced in abundance, yet not so as to give a solid conviction of it, 'till we actually experience it. Thus it was with my friend—whose case I sent you. When God gave him the key (as he expressed it) then the scriptures were unlocked. His wishing himself a Deist some time before, was not from any libertine exceptions he made to the precepts of the gospel—but from the perplexing embarrassments he had found, by endeavouring to understand the doctrines, by dint of reason, though reason in him was as strong and penetrating, as in most men I ever met with.

with. Upon your present plan, how can I hope to satisfy you, though even St. Paul asserts it, that the carnal mind is enmity against God; you will readily agree with me to the proposition as it stands in St. Paul's words, but I think will not so readily assent to what I have no more doubt than of my own existence, is the sense of it. That the heart of man, of any man, every man, however apparently amiable in his outward conduct, however benevolent to his fellow-creatures, however abundant and zealous in his devotions, is by nature enmity against God. Not indeed against the idea he himself forms of God, but against the character which God has revealed of himself in the scripture. Man is an enemy to the justice, sovereignty and law of God, and to the alone method of salvation he has appointed in the gospel by faith only; by such a faith, as it is no more in his power to contribute to the production of in himself, than he can contribute to raising the dead, or making a world. Whatever is of the flesh is flesh, and can rise no higher than its principle; but the Lord could convince you of this by a glance of thought.

But I must break off for want both of room and time. Let me remind you of our agreement, to use and to allow the greatest freedom, and not to be offended with what is meant well on either side. Something in your last letter made me apprehensive you were a little displeas'd with me. He that knows my heart, knows that I wish you well as my own soul.

The expression of atoning for disobedience by repentance, was in one of your sermons. I considered it as unguarded; but on my view of things, it were in a manner impossible I could use that expression, though perhaps too often unguarded myself.

I am sincerely yours,

October 28.

LETTER VII.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

A T length I take up your favor of August 14, with design to give a more explicit answer. My delaying hitherto has been unavoidable; I am sorry to have your patience put to so long a trial, and should be more sorry, but that I consider that in my former papers, sermons, Omicron's letters, &c. you already possess the whole (in substance) of what I have to offer. My present part is but actum agere, to repeat what I have elsewhere expressed, only with some variety and enlargement—You yourself well state the situation of our debate when you say, “Nor in truth do you offer any arguments to convince me, nor does it seem very consistent on your grounds so to do. And if this important change is to be brought about by the intervention of some extraordinary impulse of the Holy Spirit, and cannot be brought about without it, I do not see any thing farther that I have to do than to keep my mind as much unbiassed as I can, and to wait and pray for it.” I think my letter from London was to the purport of these your own words, though you seemed dissatisfied with it.—While we see through a different medium, it will be easy for you to answer every text I might adduce in support of my sentiments, as you have those I have already brought, “That you understand them otherwise.” In order to support my sense of one text, I should perhaps quote and argue from twenty more, and still "You would understand them otherwise." The life of man, yea, of Methuselah, would hardly suffice to prove, object and defend all that might be alledged on both sides in this way; and at last we should leave off as we began, more fully confirmed in our own opinions, unless the Lord, by his Holy Spirit, should be pleased to shew the person who maintained the wrong side of the argument where his mistake lay. However, I mean to take some notice of your queries as they offer themselves.

The first which occurs is complicated—The substance I think is, whether such belief and aims as you possess, will stand you in no stead unless you likewise believe grace irresistible, predestination absolute, faith in supernatural impulses, &c. ? You may have observed, I have several times wavered speaking about predestination or election, not that I am ashamed of the doctrine; because if it be indeed absurd, shocking and unjust, the blame will not deservedly fall upon me, for I did not invent it, but upon the scriptures, where, I am sure, it is laid down in as plain terms, as that God created the heavens and the earth. I own, I cannot but wonder, that persons professing any reverence for the Bible, should so openly and strongly declare their abhorrence of what the Bible so expressly teaches—Namely, that there is a discrimination of persons, by the grace and good pleasure of God, where by nature there is no difference, and that all things respecting the salvation of these persons is infallibly secured by a divine predestination.

I do

I do not offer this as a rational doctrine (though it be highly so to me) but it is scriptural, or else the scripture is a mere nose of wax, and without a determinate meaning. What ingenuity is needful to interpret many passages, in a sense more favorable to our natural prejudices against God's sovereignty! Matt. xi. 25, 26. and xiii. 10—17. Mark xiii. 20, 22. John xvii. passim, John x. 26. Rom. viii. 28—30, and ix. 13—24, and xi. 7. Eph. i. 4, 5. 1 Peter i. 2. Were I fond of disputing, as I am not, I think I could put a close reasoner hard to it, to maintain the truth of scripture prophecies, or the belief of a particular providence, unless he would admit a Divine Predestination of causes and events as the ground of his arguments. However, as I said, I have chosen to wave the point. Because, however true and necessary in itself, the knowledge and comprehension of it, is not necessary to the being of a true Christian, though I can hardly conceive he can be an established consistent believer without it. This doctrine, is not the turning point between you and me; the nature of justification, and the method of a sinner's acceptance with God, are of much more immediate importance; and therefore, if I am to speak plainly, I must say, that I look upon your present sentiments, attainments and advances, as you describe them, to constitute that kind of gain the Apostle speaks of, and concerning which I hope you will one day be of his mind, and be glad to account it all loss, that you may win Christ, and be found in him, not having your own righteousness, which is of the law, but the righteousness which is of God by faith. Phil. iii. 4, 7, 8, 9, 10. For, as you tell me, you never remember a time, when you were not conscious before God of great unworthiness—and intervals of earnest endeavors to serve him, though not with the same success, yet something in the same way as at present; this is but saying in other words, you never remember a time when old things passed away, and all things became new; and yet, the Apostle insists much upon this, 2 Cor. iv. 6. and v. 17. The convictions of natural conscience, and those which are wrought in the heart by the Holy Spirit, are different, not only in degree, but in kind; the light of a glow-worm and of the sun do not more essentially differ. The former are partial and superficial, leave us in possession of a supposed power of our own, are pacified by some appearances of an outward change, and make us no further sensible of the necessity of a Savior, than to make our doings and duties (if I may so express myself) full weight, which perhaps might otherwise be a little deficient, when brought to the balances of the sanctuary. But truly spiritual convictions give us far other views of sin; they lead us to a deep and awful consideration of the root, our total absolute depravity, and our utter apostacy from God, by which we are incapable of doing good, as a dead man is of performing the functions of life. They lead us to the rule and standard, the strict, holy, inflexible law of God, which reaches to the thoughts and intents of the heart, requires perfect, universal, persevering obedience, denounces a curse upon every failure, (Gal, iii. 10.) and affords neither place, or strength for repentance. Thus they sweep away every hope and refuge we had before, and fix upon us a sense of guilt and condemnation, from which there is no relief, till we can look to Jesus, as the wounded Israelites did, to the Brazen serpent, which was not to give efficacy to medicines and plaisters of their own application, but to heal them completely of itself by looking at it. John iii. 14, 15 and vi. 40. Isaiab. xliii. 22.

You wish me to explain my distinction between faith and rational assent. And though I know no two things in the world more clearly distinct in themselves, or more expressly distinguished in scripture, yet I fear I may not easily make it appear to you: you allow faith, in your sense, to be the gift of God; but in my sense, it is likewise wrought by the operation of God, Col. ii. 12. το υπερβαλλον μεγαθος της δυναμειως αυτου—κατα την ενεργειαν του κρατους της ισχυος αυτου; * that same energy of the power of his strength, by which the dead body of Jesus was raised from the dead; can these strong expressions intend no more than a rational assent, such as we give to a proposition in Euclid? I believe fallen reason is, of itself, utterly incapable even of assenting to the great truths of revelation; it may assent to the terms in which they are proposed, but it must put its own interpretation upon them, or it would despise them. The natural man can neither receive, or discern the things of God; and if any one would be wise, the Apostle's first advise to him is, Let him become a fool, that he may be wise, for the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God.

Indeed when the heart is changed and the mind enlightened, then reason is sanctified, and if I may so say baptized, renounces its curious disquisitions, and is content humbly to tread in the path of revelation. This is one difference, assent may be the act of our natural reason; faith is the effect of immediate almighty power. Another difference is, faith is always efficacious, "it worketh by love;" whereas assent is often given where it has little or no influence upon the conduct. Thus for instance, every one will assent to this truth, all men are mortal. Yet the greatest part of mankind, though they readily assent to the proposition, and it would be highly irrational to do otherwise, yet live as they might do, if the reverse were true. But they who have divine faith feel as well as say, they are pilgrims and sojourners upon earth. Again, faith gives peace of conscience, access to God, and a sure evidence and subsistence of things not seen, Rom. v. 1, 2. Heb. xi. 1. Whereas a calm dispassionate reasoner may be compelled to assent to the external arguments in favor of Christianity, and yet remain a total stranger to that communion with God, that spirit of adoption, that foretaste of glory which is the privilege and portion of believers. So likewise faith overcomes the world, which rational assent will not do—Witness the lives and tempers of thousands, who yet would be affronted if their assent to the gospel should be questioned. To sum up all in a word, "He that believes shall be

be saved." But surely many who give a rational assent to the gospel, live and die in those sins which exclude from the kingdom of God, Gal. v. 19—21. Faith is the effect of a principle of new life implanted in the soul, that was before dead in trespasses and sins; and it qualifies not only for obeying the Savior's precepts, but chiefly and primarily for receiving from and rejoicing in his fulness, admiring his love, his work, his person, his glory, his advocacy. It makes Christ precious, enthrones him in the heart, presents him as the most delightful object to our meditations, as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and strength; our root, head, life, shepherd and husband. These are all scriptural expressions and images setting forth, so far as words can declare, what Jesus is in himself and to his believing people. But how cold is the comment which rational assent puts upon very many passages wherein the Apostle Paul endeavors (but in vain) to express the fulness of his heart upon this subject. A most valued friend of mine, a clergyman now living, had for many years given a rational assent to the gospel. He labored with much earnestness upon your plan, was very exemplary in his whole conduct, preached almost incessantly (two or three times every day in the week for years) having a parish in the remote parts of Yorkshire of great extent, and containing five or six different hamlets at some distance from each other. He succeeded likewise with his people, so far as to break them off from outward irregularities, and was mentioned in a letter to the Society for propagating the Gospel (which I have seen in print)

as the most perfect example of a parish priest, which this nation, or perhaps this age has produced. Thus he went on for many years teaching his people what he knew, for he could teach them no more. He lived in such retirement and recess, that he was unacquainted with the persons and principles of any who are now branded as enthusiasts and methodists. One day reading Ephes. iii. in his Greek testament, his thoughts were stopped by the word ανεξιχνιαστον in verse 8. He was struck, and led to think with himself to this purpose, “The Apostle, when speaking of the love and riches of Christ, uses remarkable expressions; he speaks of heights, depths, and lengths and breadths and unsearchables, where I seem to find every thing plain, easy and rational. He finds mysteries where I can perceive none. Surely, though I use the words gospel, faith and grace with him, my ideas of them must be different from his.” This led him to a close examination of all his epistles, and, by the blessing of God, brought on a total change in his views and preaching. He no longer set his people to keep a law of faith, to trust in their sincerity and endeavors, upon some general hope that Christ would help them out where they came short—but he preached Christ himself as the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth. He felt himself, and labored to convince others; that there is no hope for a sinner, but merely in the blood of Jesus, and no possibility of his doing any works acceptable to God, till he himself be first made accepted in the Beloved. Nor did he labor in vain. Now his preaching effected not only an outward reformation,

but a real change of heart in very many of his hearers. The word was received, as Paul expresses it, not with a rational assent only, but with demonstration and power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, and their endeavors to observe the gospel precepts, were abundantly more extensive, uniform and successful, when they were brought to say with the Apostle—I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life I live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God.

Such a change of views and sentiments I pray God my friend may experience. These things may appear uncouth to you at present, as they have done to many, who now bless God for shewing them what their reason could never have taught them. My divinity is unfashionable enough at present, but it was not so always; you will find few books written from the æra of the reformation till a little before Laud's time that set forth any other. There were few pulpits till after the restoration from which any other was heard. A lamentable change has indeed since taken place; but God has not left himself without witnesses. You think, though I disclaim infallibility, I arrogate too much in speaking with so much certainty. I am fallible indeed—but I am sure of the main points of doctrine I hold. I am not in the least doubt whether salvation be of faith or of works. Whether faith be of our own power, or of God's operation. Whether Christ's obedience, or our own, be the just ground of our hope. Whether a man can truly call Jesus Lord, but by the teaching of the Holy Ghost. I have no more hesitation about these points, than I should have were I asked, Whether it was God or man who created the heavens and the earth? Besides, as I have more than once observed, your sentiments were once my own. So that I, who have travelled both roads, may have perhaps some stronger reasons to determine me which is the right, than you can have who have only travelled one.

Your two sheets may lead me to write as many quires, if I do not check myself. I now come to the two queries you propose, the solution of which you think will clearly mark the difference of our sentiments. The substance of them is—1st. Whether I think any sinner ever perished in his sins (to whom the gospel has been preached) because God refused to supply him with such a proportion of his assistance as was absolutely necessary to his believing and repenting, or without his having previously rejected the incitements of his Holy Spirit? A full answer to this would require a sheet—But briefly, I believe that all mankind being corrupt and guilty before God, he might, without impeachment to his justice, have left them all to perish, as we are assured he did the fallen angels. But he has pleased to shew mercy, and mercy must be free. If the sinner has any claim to it, so far it is justice, not mercy. HE, who is to be our judge, assures us that few find the gate that leadeth to life, while many throng the road to destruction. Your question seems to imply, that you think God either did make salvation equally open to all, or that it would have been more becoming his goodness to have done so.

But he is the potter, we are the clay: his ways and thoughts are above ours, as the heavens are higher than the earth. The Judge of all the earth will do right. He has appointed a day, when he will manifest, to the conviction of all, that HE has done right. Till then, I hold it best to take things upon his word, and not too harshly determine what it becomes Jehovah to do. Instead of saying what I think, let it suffice to remind you of what St. Paul thought, Rom. ix. 15—21. But farther, I say, that unless mercy were afforded to those who are saved, in a way peculiar to themselves, and which is not afforded to those who perish, I believe no one soul could be saved. For I believe fallen man, universally considered as such, is as incapable of doing the least thing towards his salvation, till prevented by the grace of God (as our article speaks) as a dead body is of restoring itself to life. Whatever difference takes place between men in this respect is of Grace, that is of God, undeserved. Yea, his first approaches to our hearts are undesired too; for till he seeks us, we cannot, we will not seek him, Psalms cx. 3. It is in the day of his power, and not before, his people are made willing. But I believe where the gospel is preached, they who do perish, do wilfully resist the light, and chuse and cleave to darkness, and stifle the convictions which the truths of God, when his true gospel is indeed preached, will in one degree or other force upon their minds. The cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, the love of other things, things, the violence of sinful appetites, their prejudices, pride and self-righteousness, either prevent the reception, or choak the growth of the good seed: thus their own sin and obstinacy is the proper cause of their destruction; they will not come to Christ that they may have life. At the same time it is true that they cannot, unless they are supernaturally drawn of God, John v. 40. vi. 44. They will not, and they cannot come, both are equally true, and they are consistent. For a man's cannot is not a natural but a moral inability. Not an impossibility in the nature of things, as it is for me to walk upon the water, or to fly in the air; but such an inability as instead of extenuating, does exceedingly enhance and aggravate his guilt. He is so blinded by Satan, so alienated from God by nature and wicked works, so given up to sin, so averse from that way of salvation, which is contrary to his pride and natural wisdom, that he will not embrace it or seek after it. And therefore he cannot, till the grace of God powerfully enlightens his mind and overcomes his obstacles—But this brings me to your second query.

II. Do I think that God, in the ordinary course of his providence, grants this assistance in an irresistible manner, or effects faith and conversion without the sinners own hearty consent and concurrence? I rather chose to term grace invincible than irresistible. For it is too often resisted even by those who believe; but because it is invincible it triumphs over all resistance, when he is pleased to bestow it. For the rest, I believe no sinner is converted without his own hearty will and concurrence. But he is not willing till he is made so. Why does he at all refuse? Because he is insensible of his state, because he knows not the evil of sin, the strictness of the law, the majesty of God whom he has offended, nor the total apostacy of his heart. Because he is blind to eternity, and ignorant of the excellency of Christ. Because he is comparatively whole, and sees not his need of this great physician. Because he relies upon his own wisdom, power and supposed righteousness. Now in this state of things, when God comes with a purpose of mercy, he begins by convincing the person of sin, judgment and righteousness, causes him to feel and know that he is a lost, condemned, helpless creature; and then discovers to him the necessity, sufficiency and willingness of Christ to save them that are ready to perish, without money or price, without doings or deservings—Then he sees faith to be very different from a rational assent, finds that nothing but the power of God can produce a well-grounded hope in the heart of a convinced sinner; therefore looks to Jesus, who is the author and finisher of faith, to enable him to believe. For this he waits in what we call the means of grace, he prays, he reads the word, he thirsts for God, as the hart pants for the water-brooks; and though perhaps for a while he is distressed with many doubts and fears, he is encouraged to wait on, because Jesus has said, “Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out.” The obstinacy of the will remains, while the understanding is dark, and ceases when that is enlightened. Suppose a man walking in the dark, where there are pits and precipices of which he is not aware:

You are sensible of his danger, and call after him, but he thinks he knows better than you, refuses your advice, and is perhaps angry with you for your importunity. He sees no danger, therefore will not be persuaded there is any. But if you go with a light, get before him and shew him plainly, that if he takes another step, he falls beyond the power of recovery—then he will stop of his own accord, blame himself for not minding you before, and be ready to comply with your farther directions. In either case man's will acts with equal freedom, the difference of his conduct arises from conviction. Something like this is the case of our spiritual concerns. Sinners are called and warned by the word, but they are wise in their own eyes, and take but little notice till the Lord gives them light, which he is not bound to give to any, and therefore cannot be bound to give to all. They who have it have reason to be thankful, and subscribe to the Apostle's words: By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God.

I have not yet half done with the first sheet: shall consider the rest at leisure, but send this as a specimen of my willingness to clear my sentiments to you as far as I can. Unless it should please God to make what I offer satisfactory, I well know beforehand what objections and answers will occur to you, for these points have been often debated; and after a course of twenty-seven years, in which religion has been the chief object of my thoughts and enquiries, I am not entirely a stranger to what can be offered on either side. What I write, I write simply and in love, beseeching him, who alone can set a seal to his own truth, to guide you and bless you. This letter has been more than a week in hand; I have been called from it I suppose ten times, frequently in the middle of a period or a line. My leisure, which before was small, is now reduced almost to a nothing. But I am desirous to keep up my correspondence with you, because I feel an affectionate interest in you, and because it pleased God to put it into your heart to apply to me. You cannot think how your first letter struck me: it was so unexpected, and seemed so improbable that you should open your mind to me, I immediately conceived a hope that it would prove for good. Nor am I yet discouraged.

When you have leisure and inclination, write; I shall always be glad to hear from you, and I will proceed in answering what I have already by me, as fast as I can—but I have many letters now waiting for answers which must be attended to.

I recommend you to the blessing and care of the great Shepherd; and remain

Your sincere friend and servant,

November 17, 1775.

LETTER VIII.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

ARE you willing I should still call you so, or are you quite weary of me. Your silence makes me suspect the latter. However, it is my part to fulfil my promise, and then leave the event to God. As I have but an imperfect remembrance of what I have already written, I may be liable to some repetitions; I cannot stay to comment upon every line in your Letter, but I proceed to notice such passages as seem most to affect the subject in debate. When you speak of the scripture's maintaining one consistent sense, which, if the word of God, it certainly must do, you say, you read and understand it in this one consistent sense, nay, you cannot remember the time when you did not. It is otherwise with me and with multitudes; we remember when it was a sealed book, and we are sure it would have been so still had not the Holy Spirit opened our understandings. But when you add, though I pretend not to understand the whole, yet what I do understand appears perfectly consistent; I know not how far this exception may extend, for perhaps the reason why you allow you do not understand some parts, is because you cannot make them consistent with the sense you put upon other parts. You quote my words, "That when we are conscious of our depravity, reasoning stands us in no stead;" undoubtedly reason always will stand stand rational creatures in some stead; but my meaning is, that when we are deeply convinced of sin, all our former reasonings upon the ways of God, while we made our conceptions the standard by which we judge what is befitting him to do, as if he were altogether such an one as ourselves—all those cobweb reasonings are swept away, and we submit to his αυτες εφη without reasoning, though not without reason. For we have the strongest reason imaginable to acknowledge ourselves vile and lost, without righteousness and strength, when we actually feel ourselves to be so.—You speak of the gospel terms of justification.—This term is faith. Mark xvi. 16. Acts xiii. 39. The gospel propounds, admits no other term. But this faith, as I endeavored to shew in my former Letter, is very different from rational assent. You speak likewise of the law of faith; by which, if you mean what some call the remedial law, which we are to obey as well as we can, and such obedience together with our faith, will entitle us to acceptance with God, I am persuaded the scripture speaks of no such thing. Grace and works of any kind, in the point of acceptance with God, are mentioned by the Apostle, not only as opposites, or contraries, but as absolutely contradictory to each other, like fire and water, light and darkness—so that the affirmation of one, is the denial of the other. Rom. iv. 5, and xi. 6. God justifies freely, justifies the ungodly and him that worketh not. Though justifying faith be indeed an active principle, it worketh by love, yet not for acceptance. Those whom the Apostle exhorts “to work out their own salvation with with fear and trembling,” he considers as justified already, for he considers them as believers, in whom he supposed God had already begun a good work, and if so was confident he would accomplish it. Phil. i. 6. To them, the consideration that God (who dwells in the hearts of believers) wrought in them to will and to do, was a powerful motive and encouragement to them to work; that is, to give all diligence in his appointed means; as a right sense of the sin that dwelleth in us, and the snares and temptations around us, will teach us still to work with fear and trembling. You suppose a difference between Christians (so called) who are devoted to God in baptism, and those who in the first ages were converted from abominable superstitions and idolatrous vices.—It is true, in Christian countries we do not worship heathen divinities Eo nomine. And this is the principal difference I can find. Neither reason or observation will allow me to think, that human nature is a whit better now, than it was in the Apostle’s time. I know no kinds or degrees of wickedness which prevailed among heathens, which are not prevalent among nominal Christians, who have perhaps been baptized in their infancy; and therefore, as the streams in the life are equally wordly, sensual, devilish, I doubt not but the fountain in the heart is equally polluted and poisonous. And that it is as true, as in the days of Christ and his Apostles, that unless a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. You sent me a Sermon upon the new birth, or regeneration, and you have several of mine on the same subject. I wish you to compare them with each

each other, and with the scripture, and I pray God to shew you wherein the difference consists, and on which side the truth lies.

When you desire me to reconcile God's being the author of sin, with his justice; you shew that you misunderstand the whole strain of my sentiments, for I am persuaded you would not misrepresent them. It is easy to charge harsh consequences, which I neither allow, nor indeed do they follow from my sentiments. God cannot be the author of sin, in that sense you would fix upon me; but is it possible that upon your plan, you find no difficulty in what the scripture teaches us upon this subject? I conceive that those who were concerned in the death of Christ, were very great sinners, and that in nailing him to the cross, they committed atrocious wickedness. Yet if the Apostle may be believed, all this was according to the determinate council and foreknowledge of God, Acts ii. 23. and they did no more than what his hand and purpose had determined should be done, Chap. iv. 28. And you will observe, that this wicked act (wicked with respect to the perpetrators) was not only permitted, but fore-ordained in the strongest and most absolute sense of the word; the glory of God and the salvation of men depended upon its being done, and just in that manner, and with all those circumstances which actually took place. And yet Judas and the rest acted freely, and their wickedness was properly their own. Now, my friend, the arguments which satisfy you, that the scripture does not represent God as the author of this sin, in this appointment, will plead for me at the same time;

time; and when you think you easily overcome me by asking "can God be the author of sin?" your imputation falls as directly upon the word of God himself. God is no more the author of sin, than the sun is the cause of ice—But it is in the nature of water to congeal into ice, when the sun's influence is suspended to a certain degree. So there is sin enough in the hearts of men, to make the earth the very image of hell, and to prove that men are no better than incarnate devils, were he to suspend his influence and restraint. Sometimes, and in some instances, he is pleased to suspend it considerably, and so far as he does, human nature quickly appears in its true colors. Objections of this kind have been repeated and refuted, before either you or I were born, and the Apostle evidently supposes they would be urged against his doctrine, when he obviates the question. Why doth he yet find fault, who hath resisted his will? To which he gives no other answer than by referring it to God's sovereignty, and the power which a potter has over the clay. I think I have in a former Letter made some reply to the charge of positiveness in my own opinion. I acknowledge that I am fallible, yet I must again lay claim to a certainty about the way of salvation. I am as sure of some things as of my own existence; I should be so if there was no human creature upon earth but myself. However, my sentiments are confirmed by the suffrages of thousands, who have lived before me, of many with whom I have personally conversed in different places and circumstances, unknown to each other; yet all have received the same views, because taught by

by the same Spirit. And I have likewise been greatly confirmed by the testimony of many, with whom I have conversed in their dying hours. I have seen them rejoicing in the prospect of death, free from fears, breathing the air of immortality; heartily disclaiming their duties and performances, acknowledging that their best actions were attended with evil sufficient to condemn them, renouncing every shadow of hope, but what they derived from the blood of Christ, as the sole cause of their acceptance, yet triumphing in him over every enemy and fear, and as sure of heaven as if they were already there. And such were the Apostle's hopes, wholly founded on knowing whom he had believed, and his persuasion of his ability to keep that which he had committed unto him. This is faith, a renouncing of every thing we are apt to call our own, and relying wholly upon the blood, righteousness and intercession of Jesus. However, I cannot communicate this my certainty to you, I only tell you there is such a thing, in hopes, if you do not think I wilfully lie both to God and man, you will be earnest to seek it from him, who bestowed it on me, and who will bestow it upon all who will sincerely apply to him, and patiently wait upon him for it. -

I cannot but wonder, that while you profess to believe the depravity of human nature, you should speak of good qualities inherent in it. The word of God describes it as evil, only evil, and that continually. That there are such qualities as Stoics and infidels call virtue, I allow. God has not left man destitute of such dispositions as are necessary to the peace of society, but I deny there is any moral goodness in them, unless they are founded in a supreme love to God, have his glory for their aim, and are produced by faith in Jesus Christ. A man may give all his goods to feed the poor, and his body to be burned in zeal for the truth, and yet be a mere nothing, a tinkling cymbal in the sight of him who seeth not as man seeth, but judgeth the heart. Many infidels and avowed enemies to the grace and gospel of Christ, have made a fair shew of what the world call virtue, but Christian virtue is grace, the effect of a new nature, and new life; and works thus wrought in God, are as different from the faint partial imitations of them which fallen nature is capable of producing, as a living man is from a statue. A statue may express the features and lineaments of the person whom it represents, but there is no life.

Your comment on the seventh to the Romans, latter part, contradicts my feelings. You are either of a different make and nature from me, or else you are not rightly apprized of your own state, if you do not find the Apostle's complaints very suitable to yourself. I believe it applicable to the most holy Christian upon earth. But controversies of this kind are worn thread-bare. When you speak of the spiritual part of a natural man, it sounds to me like the living part of a dead man, or the seeing part of a blind man. Paul tells me, that the natural man (whatever his spiritual part may be) can neither receive or discern the things of God. What the Apostle speaks of himself, Rom. vii. is no more, when rightly understood, than what he affirms of all who are partakers of a spiritual life, or who are true believers, Gal. v. 17. The carnal natural mind is enmity against God, not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be—When you subjoin, till it be set at liberty from the law of sin, you do not comment upon the text, but make an addition of your own, which the text will by no means bear. The carnal mind is enmity. An enemy may be reconciled, but enmity itself is incurable. This carnal mind, natural man, old man, flesh, for the expressions are all equivalent, and denote and include the heart of man as he is by nature, may be crucified, must be mortified, but cannot be sanctified. All that is good or gracious is the effect of a new creation, a supernatural principle, wrought in the heart by the gospel of Christ, and the agency of his Spirit; and till that is effected, the το υψηλον, the highest attainment, the finest qualifications in man, however they may exalt him in his own eyes, or recommend him to the notice of his fellow worms, are but abomination in the sight of God, Luke xvi. 15. The gospel is calculated and designed to stain the pride of human glory. It is provided, not for the wise and the righteous, for those who think they have good dispositions and good works to plead, but for the guilty, the helpless, the wretched, for those, who are ready to perish; it fills the hungry with good things, but it sends the rich empty away. See Rev. iii. 17, 18.

You ask, if man can do nothing without an extraordinary impulse from on high, is he to sit still and careless? By no means—I am far from saying man can do nothing—Though I believe he cannot cannot open his own eyes, or give himself faith— I wish every man to abstain carefully from sinful company, and sinful actions, to read the Bible, to pray to God for his heavenly teaching—For this waiting upon God he has a moral ability; and if he persevere thus in seeking, the promise is sure, that he shall not seek in vain. But I would not have him mistake the means for the end, think himself good because he is preserved from gross vices and follies—or trust to his religious course of duties for acceptance, nor be satisfied till Christ be revealed in him, formed within him, dwell in his heart by faith, and till he can say upon good grounds, I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me—I need not tell you these are scriptural expressions. I am persuaded; if they were not, they would be exploded by many as unintelligible jargon. True faith, my dear Sir, unites the soul to Christ, and thereby gives access to God, and fills it with a peace passing understanding, a hope, a joy unspeakable and full of glory; teaches us that we are weak in ourselves, but enables us to be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. To those who thus believe Christ is precious, their beloved, they hear and know his voice; the very sound of his name gladdens their hearts, and he manifests himself to them as he does not to the world. Thus the scriptures speak, thus the first Christians experienced, and this is precisely the language which in our days is despised as enthusiasm and folly. For it is now as it was then, though these things are revealed to babes, and they are as sure of them as that they see the noon-day sun sun; they are hidden from the wise and prudent, till the Lord makes them willing to renounce their own wisdom, and to become fools that they may be truly wise, 1 Cor. i. 18, 19. chap. iii. 8. chap. viii. 2. Attention to the education of children is an undoubted duty, and it is a mercy when it so far succeeds as to preserve them from gross wickedness, but will not change the heart. They who receive Christ are born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. John i. 13.

If a man professes to love the Lord Jesus, I am willing to believe him, if he does not give me proof to the contrary. But I am sure, at the same time, no one can love him in the scriptural sense who does not know the need and the worth of a Savior: in other words, who is not brought, as a ruined helpless sinner, to live upon him for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. They who love him thus will speak highly of him, and acknowledge that he is their all in all. And they who thus love him and speak of him, will get little thanks for their pains in such a world as this—
“All that live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution; the world that hated him, will hate them.”
 And though it is possible by his grace to put to silence, in some measure, the ignorance of foolish men; and though his providence can protect his people, so that not a hair of their heads can be hurt without his permission, yet the world will shew their teeth, if they are not suffered to bite. The Apostles were accounted babblers, ως περικαθαρματα του κοσμου και παντων περιψημια. I need not point out to you the force of these expressions. We are no better than the Apostles, nor have we reason to expect much better treatment, so far as we walk in their steps. On the other hand, there is a sober, decent way of speaking of God, and goodness, and benevolence and sobriety, which the world will bear well enough—nay, we may say a little about Jesus Christ, as ready to make up the deficiencies of our honest and good endeavors, and this will not displease them. But if we preach him as the only foundation—lay open the horrid evils of the human heart, tell our hearers that they are dead in trespasses and sins, and have no better ground of hope in themselves than the vilest malefactors, in order to exalt the glory of Jesus as saving those who are saved, wholly and freely for his own name's sake; if we tell the virtuous and decent, as well as the profligate, that unless they are born again, and made partakers of living faith, and count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, they cannot be saved, this the world cannot bear. We shall be called knaves or fools, uncharitable bigots, and twenty hard names. If you have met with nothing like this; I wish it may lead you to suspect whether you have yet received the right key to the doctrines of Christ, for depend upon it, the offence of the cross is not ceased.
 VOL. I. L not

I am grieved and surprized that you seem to take little notice of any thing in the account of my deceased friend, but his wishing himself to be a Deist, and his having play books about him in his illness. As to the plays, they were Shakespear's, which, as a man of taste, it is no great wonder he should should sometimes look in. Your remark on the other point shews that you are not much acquainted with the exercises of the human mind under certain circumstances. I believe I observed formerly that it was not a libertine wish. Had you known him, you would have known one of the most amiable and unblemished characters. Few were more beloved and admired for an uniform course of integrity, moderation and benevolence: but he was discouraged. He studied the bible, believed it in general to be the word of God, but his wisdom, his strong turn for reasoning, stood so in his way that he could get no solid comfort from it. He felt the vanity of the schemes proposed by many men admired in the world as teachers of divinity; and he felt the vanity likewise of his own. He was also a minister, and had a sincere design of doing good. He wished to reform the profligate, and comfort the afflicted by his preaching; but as he was not acquainted with that one kind of preaching which God owns to the edification of the hearers, he found he could do neither. A sense of disappointments of this kind distressed him. Finding in himself none of that peace which the scripture speaks of, and none of the influence he hoped for, attending his ministry, he was led sometimes to question the truth of the scripture.—We have a spiritual enemy always near, to press upon a mind in this desponding situation: nor am I surpris'd that he should then wish himself a Deist—since, if there were any hope for a sinner, but by faith in the blood of Jesus, he had as much of his own goodness to depend upon as most I have known. As for the rest; if you could see nothing admirable and wonderful in the clearness, the dignity, the spirituality of his expressions, after the Lord revealed the gospel to him; I can only say, I am sorry for it. This I know, that some persons of sense, taste, learning and reason, and far enough from my sentiments, have been greatly struck with them. You say, a death-bed repentance is what you would be sorry to give any hope of. My dear friend, it is well for poor sinners that God's thoughts and ways are as much above men's as the heavens are higher than the earth. We agreed to communicate our sentiments freely, and promised not to be offended with each other's freedom if we could help it. I am afraid of offending you by a thought just now upon my mind, and yet I dare not in conscience suppress it—I must therefore venture to say, that I hope they who depend upon such a repentance as your scheme points out, will repent of their repentance itself upon their death-bed at least, if not sooner. You and I, perhaps, should have encouraged the fair-spoken young man, who said he had kept all the commandments from his youth, and rather have left the thief upon the cross to perish like a villain, as he lived. But Jesus thought differently. I do not encourage sinners to defer their repentance to their death-beds—I press the necessity of a repentance this moment. But then I take care to tell them that repentance is the gift of God, that Jesus is exalted to bestow it, and that all their endeavors that way, unless they seek to him for grace, will be vain as washing a Blackmoor, and transient as washing a swine, which will soon return to the mire again. I know the evil heart will abuse the grace of God; the Apostle knew this likewise, Rom. iii. 8. and vi. 3. But this did not tempt him to suppress the glorious grace of the gospel, the power of Jesus to save to the uttermost, and his merciful promise, that whosoever cometh unto him he will in no wise cast out. The repentance of a natural heart, proceeding wholly from fear, like that of some malefactors, who are sorry, not that they have committed robbery or murder, but that they must be hanged for it; this undoubtedly is nothing worth, whether in time of health, or in a dying hour. . But that μετανοια, that gracious change of heart, views and dispositions which always take place, when Jesus is made known to the soul as having died that the sinner might live, and been wounded that he might be healed. This, at whatever period God is pleased to afford and effect it by his Spirit, brings a sure and everlasting salvation with it.

Still I find I have not done: you ask my exposition of the parables of the Talents and Pounds: but at present I can write no more. I have only just time to tell you, that when I begged your acceptance of Omicron, nothing was farther from my expectation than a correspondence with you. The frank and kind manner in which you wrote presently won upon my heart. In the course of our letters upon Subscription, I observed an integrity and disinterestedness in you, which endeared you to me still more. Since that, our debates have taken a much more interesting turn; I have considered it as a call, and an opportunity put in my hand, by the especial providence of him who ruleth over all. I have embraced the occasion to lay before you simply, and rather in a way of testimony than argumentation, what (in the main) I am sure is truth. I have done enough to discharge my conscience, but shall never think I do enough to answer the affection I bear you. I have done enough likewise to make you weary of my correspondence, unless it should please God to fix the subject deeply upon your mind, and make you attentive to the possibility and vast importance of a mistake in matters of everlasting concernment. I pray that the good Spirit of God may guide you into all truths. He only is the effectual teacher. I still retain a cheerful hope that some things you cannot at present receive, will hereafter be the joy and comfort of your heart: but I know it cannot be till the Lord's own time. I cannot promise to give such long answers as your letters require, to clear up every text that may be proposed, and to answer every objection that may be started. Yet I shall be glad to change a letter now and then. At present it remains with you, whether our correspondence continues or not, as this is the third letter I have written since I heard from you, and therefore must be the last till I do. I should think what remains might be better settled viva voce, for which purpose I shall be glad to see you, or ready to wait on you when leisure will permit, and when I know it will be agreeable. But if (as life and all its affairs are precarious) we should never meet in this world, I pray God we may meet at the right hand of Jesus, in the great day, when he shall come to gather up his jewels and to judge

the world. There is an endless diversity of opinions in matters of religion, which of them are right and safe, and will lead to eternal glory, Dies iste indicabit. I am still in a manner lost amidst more engagements than I have time to comply with; but I feel and know that I am,

Dear Sir,

Your affectionate friend and servant.

MY DEAREST SIR,

Sept. 28, 1774.

I SEE the necessity of having, if possible, my principles at my fingers ends, that I may apply them as occasions arise every hour. Certainly if my ability was equal to my inclination, I would remove your tumor with a word or a touch, I would exempt you instantly and constantly, from every inconvenience and pain. But you are in the hands of One who could do all this and more, and who loves you infinitely better than I can do, and yet he is pleased to permit you to suffer. What is the plain inference? Certainly, that at the present juncture, he to whom all the concatenations and consequences of events are present in one view, sees it better for you to have this tumor than to be without it. For I have no more idea of a tumor rising (or any other incidental trial befalling you) without a cause, without a need be, without a designed advantage to result from it, than I have of a mountain or pyramid rising up of its own accord, in the middle of Salisbury-Plain. The promise is express and literally true, that all things universally and without exception, shall work together for good to them that love God. But they work together—the smallest as well as the greatest events, have their place and use—like the several stones in the arch of a bridge, where no one would singly be useful, but every one in its place is necessary to the structure and support of the arch—or rather like the movement of a watch, where though there is an evident subordination of parts, and some pieces have a greater comparative importance than others, yet the smallest pieces have their place and use, and are so far equally important, that the whole design of the machine would be obstructed for want of them. Some dispensations and turns of Divine Providence, may be compared to the main spring or capital wheels, which have a more visible, sensible, and determining influence upon the whole tenor of our lives; but the more ordinary occurrences of every day, are at least pins and pivots adjusted, timed and suited, with equal accuracy, by the hand of the same great Artist, who planned and executes the whole; and we are sometimes surprized to see how much more depends and turns upon them, than we were aware of. Then we admire his skill, and say he has done all things well. Indeed, with respect to his works of providence, as well as of creation, he well deserves the title of Maximus in Minimis. Such thoughts as these, when I am enabled abled to realize them, in some measure reconcile me to what he allots for myself or my friends, and convince me of the propriety of that exhortation, which speaks the language of love as well as authority, Be still, and know that I am God. I sympathize with you in your trial, and pray and trust that your Shepherd will be your Physician; will superintend and bless the use of means; will give you in his good time health and cure, and at all times reveal unto you abundance of peace. His promises and power are necessary for our preservation in the smoother scenes he has allotted for us, and they are likewise sufficient for the roughest. We are always equally in danger in ourselves, and always equally safe under the shadow of his wings. No storms, assaults, sieges or pestilences can hurt us till we have filled up his appointed measure of service; and when our work is done, and he has ripened us for glory, it is no great matter by what means he is pleased to call us home to himself.

I have only room to present our joint and sincerest respects. The Lord bless you all.

I am your much obliged.

MY DEAREST SIR,

OCT. 15, 1774.

I THINK the greatness of trials is to be estimated, rather by the impression they make upon our spirits, than by their outward appearance. The smallest will be too heavy for us if we are left to grapple with it in our own strength, or rather weakness, and if the Lord is pleased to put forth his power in us, he can make the heaviest light. A lively impression of his love, or of his sufferings for us, or of the glories within the veil, accompanied with a due sense of the misery from which we are redeemed; these thoughts will enable us to be not only submissive, but even joyful in tribulations. When faith is in exercise, though the flesh will have its feelings, the spirit will triumph over them. But it is needful we should know that we have no sufficiency in ourselves, and in order to know it we must feel it. And therefore the Lord sometimes withdraws his sensible influence, and then the buzzing of a fly will be an overmatch for our patience. At other times he will shew us what he can do in us and for us; then we can adopt the Apostle's words, and say, I can do or suffer all things through Christ strengthening me. He has said, My grace is sufficient for thee. It is observable, that the children of God seldom disappoint our expectations under great trials; if they shew a wrongness of spirit, it is usually in such little incidents that we are

are ready to wonder at them. For which, two reasons may be principally assigned: when great trials are in view, we run simply and immediately to our all-sufficient friend, feel our dependance, and cry in good earnest for help. But if the occasion seems small, we are too apt secretly to lean to our own wisdom and strength, as if in such slight matters we could make shift without him. Therefore in these we often fail. Again, the Lord deals with us as we sometimes see mothers with their children—when a child begins to walk, he is often very self-important; he thinks he needs no help, and can hardly bear to be supported by the finger of another. Now in such a case, if there is no danger of harm from a fall, as if he is on a plain carpet, the mother will let him alone to try how he can walk. He is pleased at first, but presently down he comes, and a few experiments of this kind convince him he is not so strong and able as he thought, and make him willing to be led. But was he upon the brink of a river or a precipice, from whence a fall might be fatal, the tender mother would not trust him to himself, no not for a moment. I have not room to make the application, nor is it needful. It requires the same grace to bear with a right spirit a cross word, as a gross injury; or the breaking of a china-plate, as the death of an only son.

I am, dearest Sir,

Yours, &c.

LETTER III.

MY DEAR SIR,

Nov. 23, 1774.

I HOPE to be informed in due time, that the Lord has given you full health and cure. He has preserved me hitherto from the hands of surgeons, but I feel as if my flesh would prove, as you say, a very coward, were it needful to submit to a painful operation. Yet I observe, when such operations are necessary, if people are satisfied of a surgeon's skill and prudence, they will not only yield to be cut at his pleasure, without pretending to direct him where, or how long he shall make the incision; but will thank and pay him for putting them to pain, because they believe it for their advantage. I wish I could be more like them in my concerns. My body, as I said, is, through mercy, free from considerable ailments, but I have a soul that requires surgeon's work continually—there is some tumor to be discussed or laid open, some dislocation to be reduced; some fracture to be healed almost daily. It is my great mercy, that One who is infallible in skill, who exercises incessant care and boundless compassion towards all his patients, has undertaken my case; and complicated as it is, I dare not doubt his making a perfect cure. Yet, alas! I too often discover such impatience, distrust and complaining, when under his hand, am so apt to find fault with the instruments he is pleased to make use of, so ready to think the salutary wounds he makes unnecessary, or too large; in a word, I shew such a promptness to control, were I able, or to direct his operations, that were not his patience beyond expression, he would before now have given me up. I am persuaded, no money would induce Mr. ———, to attend upon a patient who should act towards him, as I have towards my best physician. Sometimes I indulge a hope that I am growing wiser, and think surely, after such innumerable proofs as I have had, that he does all things well, I shall now be satisfied to leave myself quietly and without reserve to his disposal. A thousand such surrenders I have made, and a thousand times I have interpretatively retracted them. Yet still he is gracious. O, how shall I praise him at last!

I thank you for your letter; I never receive one from you without pleasure, and I believe, seldom without profit, at least, for the time. I believe with you, that there is much of the proper and designed efficacy of the gospel mystery which I have not yet experienced—And I suppose, they who are advanced far beyond me in the divine life, judge the same of their utmost present attainments. Yet I have no idea of any permanent state in this life, that shall make my experience cease to be a state of warfare and humiliation. At my first setting out, indeed, I thought to be better, and to feel myself better from year to year; I expected by degrees to attain every thing, which I then comprized in my idea of a saint. I thought my grain of grace, by much diligence and careful improvement, would in time amount to a pound, that pound in a farther space of time to a talent, and then I hoped to increase from one talent to many, so that supposing the Lord should spare me a competent number of years, I pleased myself with the thought of dying rich—But alas, these my golden expectations have been like South-Sea dreams, I have lived hitherto a poor sinner, and I believe I shall die one. Have I then gained nothing by waiting upon the Lord? Yes, I have gained that, which I once would rather have been without; such accumulated proofs of the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of my heart, as I hope, by the Lord's blessing, has in some measure taught me to know what I mean, when I say, Behold, I am vile! And in connection with this; I have gained such experience of the wisdom, power and compassion of my Redeemer, the need, the worth of his blood, righteousness, attention and intercession—the glory that he displays, in pardoning iniquity and sin, and passing by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage, that my soul cannot but cry out, Who is a God like unto thee!—Thus if I have any meaner thoughts of myself, Ezek. xvi. 63. and any higher thoughts of him than I had twenty years ago, I have reason to be thankful; every grain of this experience is worth mountains of gold. And if, by his mercy, I shall yet sink more in my own esteem, and he will be pleased to rise still more glorious to my eyes, and more precious to my heart; I expect it will be much in the same way—I was ashamed when I began to seek him, I am more ashamed now, and I expect to be most of all ashamed, when he shall appear to destroy my last enemy. But O, I may rejoice in him, to think that he will not be ashamed of me.

I am, dear Sir,

Yours, &c.

LETTER IV.

MY DEAR SIR,

May 19, 1775.

I HOPE you will find the Lord present at all times, and in all places. When it is so, we are at home every where, when it is otherwise, home is a prison and abroad a wilderness. I know what I ought to desire, and what I do desire. I point him out to others as the all in all; I esteem him as such in my own judgement—but alas! my experience abounds with complaints. He is my sun, but clouds, and sometimes walls, intercept him from my view.—He is my strength, yet I am prone to lean upon reeds. He is my friend, but on my part there is such coldness and ingratitude, as no other friend could bear. But still he is gracious, and shames me with his repeated multiplied goodness. O, for a warmer heart, a more simple dependance, a more active zeal! a more sensible deliverance from the effects of this body of sin and death. He helps me in my endeavors, to keep the vineyards of others; but alas, my own does not seem to flourish as some do around me. However, though I cannot say I labor more abundantly than they all, I have reason to say with thankfulness, by the grace of God I am what I am. My poor story would soon be much worse, did not he support, restrain and watch over me every minute. Let me intreat your praises and prayers, on the behalf of me and mine; and may the Lord bless you and yours with an increase in every good. I am, dearest Sir,

Your most affectionate,
and obliged servant.

LETTER V.

MY DEAR SIR,

September 2, 1776.

THE young woman I spoke of is still living, and not much weaker than when I left her. The Lord was pleased to relieve her on Tuesday evening, and she was comfortable the remainder of the week. But yesterday her conflicts returned, and she was in great distress. The enemy, who always fights against the peace of the Lord's children, finds great advantage against them when their spirits are weakened and worn down by long illness, and is often permitted to assault them. The reasons are hidden from us, but they are doubtless worthy of his wisdom and love, and they terminate in victory to the praise of his glorious grace, which is more signally manifested by his leading them safely through fire and water, than if their path was always smooth. He is sovereign in his dispensations, and appoints some of his people to trials and exercises, to which others, perhaps, are strangers all their days. Believers are soldiers; all soldiers by their profession are engaged to fight, if called upon; but who shall be called to sustain the hottest service, and be most frequently exposed upon the field of battle, depends upon the will of the general or king. Some of our soldiers are now upon hard service in America, while others are stationed round the palace, see the king's face daily, and have no dangers or hardships to encounter. These, however, ever, are as liable to a call as the others; but if not called upon, they may enjoy with thankfulness the more easy post assigned them. Thus, the Captain of our Salvation allots to his soldiers such stations as he thinks proper. He has a right to employ whom he will, and where he will. Some are comparatively at ease. They are not exposed to the fiercest onsets, but live near his presence; others are, to appearance, pressed above measure, beyond strength, so that they despair even of life; yet they are supported, and in the end made more than conquerors through him who hath loved them. Long observation convinces me, that the temptations which some endure, are not chastisements brought upon them by unfaithfulness, or for any thing remarkably wrong in their spirit or walk; I often rather consider that in his warfare, as in worldly wars, the post of danger and difficulty is the post of honor, and as such assigned to those whom he has favored with a peculiar measure of his grace. This young woman, in particular, was always from her first awakening remarkably humble and spiritual, and possessed of a broken and contrite spirit. I never saw her in a wrong spirit, or heard her speak an unadvised word. Yet I believe it is impossible to express the agonies she has endured. The effect of them is visible. Her animal frame was unable to sustain the burden. I believe they were the immediate cause of that illness which is now bringing her down to the grave. I doubt not but these cases depend, in a great measure, upon constitution; but then the temperament of our bodies depends upon his pleasure; for if the very hairs of our head are numbered, it is impossible that those circumstances of our frame, which, by the near connection between body and soul, have a powerful influence upon the state of our minds, can escape his notice. He could cure such bodily disorders as affect the peace of his people in a moment, yet he does not, though he loves them. There must be, therefore, wise reasons why he does not, and though we know them not now, we shall know them hereafter. Possibly some suffer for the instruction of the rest, that we may learn to be more thankful to him for the peace we enjoy, and to be more humbly dependant upon him for the continuance of it. The Lord's way is in the deep, and his path in the great waters, untraceable by our feeble reasonings, but faith brings in a good report. We need not doubt but he does all things well, and in due time we shall see it. In the mean while he checks our vain enquiries, and calls upon us to be still and know that he is God.

I brought home with me a thankful sense of the kindness and friendship I am favored with from you and all yours. I account this connection one of the great comforts of my life, and I hope it has been, and will be, not only pleasant but profitable to me. Though I am but an unapt scholar, I hope I am not unwilling to learn, and the Lord in his merciful providence appoints me many teachers. There is little praise due to us, if we either communicate or receive benefit in our intercourse with our fellow-disciples. In both we are but instruments under the influence of a higher hand. Were Christians to meet together without their Lord, they would either trifle or quarrel their time away. But as he has said, where two or three are met, there am I in the midst of them, we may well be glad of opportunities of coming together. And though, for my own part, I am so poor an improver of such seasons, that the recollection of them, when past, is generally accompanied with shame and regret; yet he is gracious and merciful, and seldom leaves me to complain that they were wholly in vain.

I am, dearest Sir,

Your's, &c.

LETTER VI.

MY DEAR SIR,

July 22, 1777.

THE complaints you make of what passes within, encourage me under what I feel myself. Indeed, if those whom I have reason to believe are more spiritual and humble than I am, did not give some testimony that they find their hearts made of the same materials as mine is, I should be sometimes hard put to it to believe that I have any part or lot in the matter, or any real knowledge of the life of faith. But this concurrent testimony of many witnesses, confirms me in what I think the scripture plainly teaches, that the soil of human nature, though many spots are certainly better weeded, planted and manured than others, is every where the same, universally bad; so bad that it cannot be worse, and of itself is only capable of producing noxious weeds, and nourishing venomous creatures. We often see the effects of culture, skill and expence will make a garden where all was desert before. When Jesus the good husbandman encloses a soil, and separates it from the waste of the world, to make it a residence for himself, a change presently takes place; it is planted and watered from above, and visited with beams infinitely more cheering and fertilizing than those of the material sun—But its natural propensity to bring forth weeds still continues, tinues, and one half of his dispensations may be compared to a company of weeders, whom he sends forth into his garden to pluck up all which he has not planted with his own hand, and which, if left to grow, would quickly overpower and overtop the rest. But, alas! the ground is so impregnated with evil seeds, and they shoot in such quick succession, that if this weeding work were not constantly repeated, all former labor would be lost, hinc illæ lachrymæ. Hence arises the necessity of daily crosses and disappointments, daily changes of frame, and such multiplied convictions, that we are nothing and can do nothing of ourselves; all are needful and barely sufficient to prevent our hearts from being over-run with pride, self-dependance and security.

Your much-indebted

MY DEAR SIR,

Nov. 6, 1777.

Y O U say you are more disposed to cry miserere than hallelujah—Why not both together? When the treble is praise, and heart-humiliation for the base, the melody is pleasant, and the harmony good. However, if not both together, we must have them alternately; not all singing, not all sighing, but an interchange and ballance, that we may be neither lifted too high, nor cast down too low, which would be the case if we were very comfortable or very sorrowful for a long continuance. But though we change, the Savior changes not. All our concerns are in his hands, and therefore safe. His path is in the deep waters, his thoughts and methods of conduct are as high above ours, as the heavens are high above the earth, and he often takes a course for accomplishing his purposes, directly contrary to what our narrow views would prescribe. He wounds in order to heal, kills that he may make alive, casts down when he designs to raise, brings a death upon our feelings, wishes and prospects, when he is about to give us the desire of our hearts—these things he does to prove us, but he himself knows and has determined before-hand what he will do! The proof indeed usually turns out to our shame; impatience and unbelief shew their heads, and prompt us to suppose this and the other thing, yea,

perhaps all things are against us, to question whether he be with us and for us, or not. But it issues likewise in the praise of his goodness, when we find that, maugre all our unkind complaints and suspicions, he is still working wonderfully for us, causing light to shine out of darkness, and doing us good in defiance of ourselves.

I am, my dear Sir,

Most affectionately your's.

MR. B——, JUN. 245

To MR. B——, JUN.

DEAR SIR,

THE lowness of your voice, and a blameable absence of mind on my part, prevented me from understanding what you said when you took your leave of me; nor did I just at that instant recollect that you were so soon going away. I could not otherwise have parted with you, without a particular expression of my warmest wishes for your welfare, and commending you with an emotion, which my heart always feels for you, to our God, and the word of his grace. Permit me therefore, by writing to assure you, so far as I can answer for myself, that the request you were pleased to make for my remembrance, will not be forgotten by me.

You are going abroad; you will carry with you, I doubt not, the best advice, strengthened by the authority and affection of parents, whom you greatly love and greatly reverence. This may seem to make any thing a stranger can offer unnecessary, if not impertinent. Yet confiding in your candor, and in your good opinion of my intention, I shall venture to let my pen run on a little longer. Not only my wishes, but my hopes are strong in your behalf. Perhaps there is hardly a young man in the kingdom, born to a fortune, who is setting out in life upon equal advantages with yourself. How many at your years, who have been brought up in affluence, are unprincipled, uninstructed, and have already entered upon a course of dissipation and folly, in which it is impossible they themselves can find satisfaction; and which (unless they are reclaimed from it by an Almighty arm) will infallibly preclude them from usefulness or esteem! Whereas your early years have been successfully employed in the pursuit of knowledge, and your education formed under the most animating and endearing influence; and the Lord has furnished you with every natural ability of body and mind, which may qualify you to serve him in that situation of life, which his providence has allotted you.

What may I not then further hope from these beginnings, especially as it is easy to observe that he has given you an amiable and promising disposition of spirit, and has not only preserved you from being hurried down the stream of a giddy world, but enabled you to account the tender restraint under which you have been educated, not a yoke, but a privilege.

I sympathize with you at what you will feel, when you are first separated from your happy family: But the Lord God, who is the sun and shield of those who fear him, will be always near you! His favor is the one thing needful, which no outward advantages can compensate the want of; and the right knowledge of him is the one thing needful, which no human teaching can communicate.

Were I more intimate with you, I could have asked the question, and perhaps received the satisfaction to know that you have already begun to consider

consider him in this light; that you feel a vanity in science, an emptiness in creatures, and find that you have desires, which only He who gave them can satisfy. I trust it either is, or will be thus. As to learning, though it is useful when we know how to make a right use of it, yet considered as in our own power, and to those who trust to it, without seeking a superior guidance, it is usually the source of perplexity, strife, scepticism and infidelity. It is indeed like a sword in a madman's hands, which gives him the more opportunity of hurting himself and others. As to what the world calls pleasure, there is so little in it, that even the philosophers of old, or many of them, though they had little of value to substitute in its room, could despise it. You will perhaps meet with some, who will talk another language, who will pretend to be too wise to submit to the Bible, and too happy in worldly things, to expect or desire any happiness beside. But I trust you have seen enough to enable you to treat such persons with the pity, and such pretensions with the contempt they deserve.

Should we set our concerns with an eternal world aside for a moment, it would be easy to demonstrate that religion is necessary, in order to make the most of this life, and to enjoy temporal good with the highest relish. In such a world as this, where we are every moment liable to so many unforeseen and unavoidable contingencies, a man without religion, may be compared to a ship in a storm, without either rudder, anchor, or pilot. But then, the religion which only deserves the name, must come from above; it must be suited to the state and wants of a sinner, it must be capable of comforting the heart, it must take away the sting and dread of death, and fix our confidence upon one who is always able to help us. Such is the religion of Jesus, such are its effects, and such are the criteria, whereby we are to judge of the various forms and schemes under which it is proposed to us. But I forbear; I am only reminding you of what you know, and what you have known to be verified by living and dying examples. This happiness, my dear Sir, is open to you, to all who seek. He is enthroned in heaven, but prayer will bring him down to the heart. Indeed he is always beforehand with us, and if we feel one desire towards him, we may accept it as a token that he gave it us, to encourage us to ask for more.

May he be your guide and guard, be with you at all times, and in all places, and bring you back to your father's house in peace. Should I live to see that day, you have few friends whose congratulations would be warmer or more sincere than mine. And if when you are settled and at leisure, you will afford me a letter, it will be both a pleasure and a favor to, dear Sir,

Your affectionate friend and servant.

LETTER IX.

To Miss M——— B———.

MY DEAR MISS M———, Nov. 11, 1775.

OUR late visit to —— was very pleasant to myself; if any thing that passed was of service to you, we know to whom the thanks are due. For we can neither communicate or receive any thing, but so far as he is pleased to enable us. One reason why he often disappoints us is, that we may learn to depend on him alone. We are prone, as you observe, to rest too much upon sensible comforts, yet they are very desirable; only as to the measure and seasons, it is well to be submissive to his will, to be thankful for them when we have them, and humbly waiting for them when we have them not. They are not, however, the proper ground of our hope; a good hope springs from such a sense of our wants, and such a persuasion of his power and grace, as engages the heart to venture upon the warrant of his promises, to trust in him for salvation. In a sense, we are often hindering him by our impatience and unbelief; but strictly speaking, when he really begins the good work, and gives us a desire which will be satisfied with nothing short of himself, he will not be hindered from carrying it on, for he has said, I will work and none shall let it. Ah, had it depended upon myself, upon my wisdom or faithfulness, I should have hindered him to purpose, and ruined myself long ago.

ago. How often have I grieved and resisted his Spirit! But hereby I have learned more of his patience and tendernefs than I could otherwise have known. He knows our frame, and what effects our evil nature fomented by the artifices of Satan will have; he fees us from first to laft. A thousand evils arife in our hearts, a thousand wrongneffes in our conduct, which as they do arife are new to ourfelves, and perhaps at fometimes we were ready to think we were incapable of fuch things; but none of them are new to him, to whom paft, prefent and future are the fame. The foresight of them did not prevent his calling us by his grace.— Though he knew we were vile, and fhould prove ungrateful and unfaithful, yet he would be found of us, he would knock at the door of our hearts and gain himfelf an entrance. Nor fhall they prevent his accomplifhing his gracious purpofe. It is our part to be abafed before him, and quietly to hope and wait for his falvation in the ufe of his appointed means. The power, fuccefs and bleffing are wholly from himfelf. To make us more fenfible of this, he often withdraws from our perceptions, and as in the abfence of the fun the wild beafts of the foreft roam abroad; fo when Jesus hides himfelf, we prefently perceive what is in our hearts, and what a poor fhift we can make without him. When he returns, his light chafes the evils away, and we are well again. However, they are not dead when moft controlled by his prefence.

It is your great and fingular mercy, my dear Mifs, that he has taught you to feek him fo early in life. You are entered in the way of falvation, but you muft not expect all at once. The work of grace is compared to the corn and to a building; the growth of the one, and the carrying forward of the other, are gradual. In a building, for instance, if it be large, there is much to be done in preparing and laying the foundation, before the walls appear above ground; much is doing within when the work does not seem perhaps to advance without, and when it is considerably forward, yet being encumbered with scaffolds and rubbish, a bye-stander sees it at a great disadvantage, and can form but an imperfect judgment of it. But all this while the architect himself, even from the laying of the first stone, conceives of it according to the plan and design he has formed; he prepares and adjusts the materials, disposing each in its proper time and place, and views it in idea as already finished. In due season it is compleated, but not in a day. The top-stone is fixed, and then the scaffolds and rubbish being removed, it appears to others as he intended it should be. Men, indeed, often plan what for want of skill or ability, or from unforeseen disappointments, they are unable to execute. But nothing can disappoint the heavenly Builder, nor will he ever be reproached with forsaking the work of his own hands, or beginning that which he could not, or would not accomplish, Phil. i. 6. Let us therefore be thankful for beginnings, and patiently wait the event. His enemies strive to retard the work, as they did when the Jews, by his order, set about re-building the temple. Yet it was finished in defiance of them all.

Believe me to be

Your affectionate and obliged servant.

LETTER X.

MY DEAR MISS M——, April 29, 1776,

I THANK you for your last: and I rejoice in the Lord's goodness to you. To be drawn by love, exempted from those distressing terrors and temptations which some are beset with; to be favored with the ordinances and means of grace, and connected with those, and with those only, who are disposed and qualified to assist and encourage you in seeking the Savior; these are peculiar privileges, which all concur in your case; he loves you, he deals gently with you, he provides well for you, and accompanies every outward privilege with his special blessing. And I trust he will lead you on from strength to strength, and shew you still greater things than you have yet seen. They whom he teaches, are always increasing in knowledge both of themselves and of him. The heart is deep, and like Ezekiel's vision, presents so many chambers of imagery one within another, that it requires time to get a considerable acquaintance with it, and we shall never know it thoroughly. It is now more than 28 years since the Lord began to open mine to my own view, and from that time to this, almost every day has discovered to me something, which till then was unobserved; and the farther I go, the more I seem convinced that I have entered but a little way. A person that travels in some parts of Derbyshire, may easily be satisfied that the country is cavernous—but how large, how deep, how numerous the caverns may be, which are hidden from us by the surface of the ground, and what is contained in them, are questions, which our nicest enquirers cannot fully answer—Thus I judge of my heart, that it is very deep and dark, and full of evil, but as to particulars, I know not one of a thousand.

And if our own hearts are beyond our comprehension, how much more incomprehensible is the heart of Jesus. If sin abounds in us, grace and love superabound in him; his ways and thoughts are higher than ours, as the heavens are higher than the earth. His love has a height, and depth, and length, and breadth, that passeth all knowledge, and his riches of grace are unsearchable riches. Ephes. iii. 8, 18, 19. All that we have received, or can receive from him, or know of him in this life, compared with what he is in himself, or what he has for us, is but as the drop of a bucket compared with the ocean, or a single ray of light in respect of the sun. The waters of the sanctuary flow to us at first almost upon a level; ankle deep, so graciously does the Lord condescend to our weakness; but they rise as we advance, and constrain us to cry out with the Apostle, O the depth! We find before us, as Dr. Watt's beautifully expresses it,

A sea of love and grace unknown,
Without a bottom or a shore.

O the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. It will be growing upon us through time, yea, I believe through eternity. What an astonishing and
what

what a cheering thought, that this high and lofty One should unite himself to our nature, that so in a way worthy of his adorable perfections, he might by his Spirit unite us to himself. Could such a thought have arisen in our hearts, without the warrant of his word, (but it is a thought which no created mind was capable of conceiving, till he revealed it), it would have been presumption and blasphemy; but now he has made it known, it is the foundation of our hope, and an inexhaustible spring of life and joy. Well may we say, Lord what is man, that thou shouldst thus visit him!

I am, sincerely,

Your obliged and affectionate servant.

LETTER XI.

MY DEAR MISS M——, Sept. 3, 1776.

WE saw no danger upon the road homeward, but my judgment tells me we are always upon the brink of danger, though we see it not, and that without the immediate protection and care of him who preserveth the stars in their courses, there could be no travelling safely a few miles, nor even sitting in safety by the fire-side. But with him we are safe in all places and circumstances, till our race is done, and his gracious purposes concerning us, in the present life, are compleatly answered—then he will call us home that we may see his face, and be with him for ever, and then it will not much signify what messenger he shall be pleased to send for us.

While he took care of us abroad, he watched over our concerns at home likewise, so that we found all well upon our return, and met with nothing to grieve us. Many go out and return home no more, and many find distressing things have happened in their absence; but we have to set up our Ebenezer, and to say, Hitherto he has helped us. Assist me to praise him.—The Lord is leading you in the good old way, in which you may perceive the footsteps of his flock who have gone before you. They had in their day the same difficulties, fears and complaints as we have, and through mercy we partake of the same consolation which

which supported and refreshed them. And the promises which they trusted and found faithful, are equally sure to us. It is still true that they who believe shall never be confounded. If left to ourselves we should have built upon sand, but he has provided and revealed a sure foundation, removed our natural prejudices against it, and now, though rains and floods and storms assault our building, it cannot fall, for it is founded upon a rock. The suspicions and fears which arise in an awakened mind, proceed, in a good measure, from remaining unbelief, but not wholly so; for there is a jealousy and diffidence of ourselves, a wariness owing to a sense of the deceitfulness of our hearts, which is a grace and a gift of the Lord. Some people who have much zeal, but are destitute of this jealous fear, may be compared to a ship that spreads a great deal of sail, but is not properly ballasted, and is therefore in danger of being upset whenever a storm comes. A sincere person has many reasons for distrusting his own judgment; is sensible of the vast importance of the case, and afraid of too hastily concluding in his own favor, and therefore not easily satisfied. However, this fear, though useful, especially to young beginners, is not comfortable; and they who simply wait upon Jesus, are gradually freed from it, in proportion as their knowledge of him, and their experience of his goodness, increases. He has a time for settling and establishing them in himself, and his time is best. We are hasty and would be satisfied at once, but his word is, Tarry thou the Lord's leisure. The work of grace is not like Jonah's gourd, which sprang spring up and flourish in a night, and as quickly withered, but rather like the oak, which, from a little acorn and a tender plant, advances with an almost imperceptible growth from year to year, till it becomes a broad, spreading and deep-rooted tree; and then it stands for ages. The Christian oak shall grow and flourish for ever. When I see any soon after they appear to be awakened, making a speedy profession of great joy, before they have a due acquaintance with their own hearts, I am in pain for them. I am not sorry to hear them afterwards complain that their joys are gone, and they are almost at their wit's end, for without some such check, to make them feel their weakness and dependance, I seldom find them turn out well—either their fervor insensibly abates, till they become quite cold, and sink into the world again (of which I have seen many instances) or, if they do not give up all, their walk is uneven, and their spirit has not that favor of brokenness and true humility which is a chief ornament of our holy profession. If they do not feel the plague of their hearts at first, they find it out afterwards, and too often manifest it to others. Therefore, though I know the Spirit of the Lord is free, and will not be confined to our rules, and there may be excepted cases, yet, in general, I believe the old proverb, Soft and fair goes far, will hold good in Christian experience. Let us be thankful for the beginnings of grace, and wait upon our Savior patiently for the increase. And as we have chosen him for our physician, let us commit ourselves to his management, and not prescribe to him what he shall prescribe for us. He knows us, and he loves us better than we do ourselves, and will do all things well.

You say, "It never came with power and life to my soul, that he died for me." If you mean, you never had any extraordinary sudden manifestation, something like a vision or a voice from heaven, confirming it to you, I can say the same. But I know he died for sinners; I know I am a sinner: I know he invites them that are ready to perish; I am such a one: I know, upon his own invitation, I have committed myself to him; and I know, by the effects, that he has been with me hitherto, otherwise I should have been an apostate long ago. And therefore I know that he died for me; for had he been pleased to kill me (as he justly might have done) he would not have shewn me such things as these.

If I must perish, would the Lord
 Have taught my heart to love his word?
 Would he have giv'n me eyes to see
 My danger and my remedy?
 Reveal'd his name, and bid me pray,
 Had he resolv'd to say me nay?

I know that I am a child, because he teaches me to say Abba, Father. I know that I am his, because he has enabled me to chuse him for mine. For such a choice and desire could never have taken place in my heart, if he had not placed it there himself. By nature I was too blind to know him, too proud to trust him, too obstinate to serve him, too base-minded to love him. The enmity I was filled with against his government, righteousness and grace, was too strong to be subdued by any power but his own. The love I bear him is but a faint and feeble spark, but it is an emanation from himself. He kindled it, and he keeps it alive; and because it is his work, I trust many waters shall not quench it.

I have only room to assure you, that I am

Your obliged,

And affectionate friend.

M Y D E A R S I R,

April 15, 1776.

I O F T E N rejoice on your behalf. Your call out of the world, was a singular comfortable instance of the power of grace. And when I consider the difficulties and snares of your situation, and that you have been kept in the middle path, preserved from undue compliances on the one hand, and unnecessary singularities on the other, I cannot doubt but the Lord has hitherto helped and guided you. Indeed you have need of his guidance. At your years, and with your expectations in life, your health firm, and your natural spirits lively, you are exposed to many snares. Yet if the Lord keeps you sensible of your danger, and dependant upon him, you will walk safely. Your security, success and comfort, depend upon him; and in the way of means, chiefly upon your being preserved in an humble sense of your own weakness. It is written, Fear not, I am with thee. It is written again, Blessed is the man who feareth always. There is a perfect harmony in those seemingly different texts. May, the wisdom that cometh from above, teach you and me to keep them both united in our view. If the Lord be with us, we have no cause of fear. His eye is upon us, his arm over us, his ear open to our prayer. His grace sufficient, his promise unchangeable. Under his protection, though the path of duty should lie through fire and water, we may cheerfully and confidently pursue it. On the other hand, our hearts are so deceitful, fallible and frail, our spiritual enemies so subtle, watchful and powerful, and they derive so many advantages from the occasions of every day, in which we are unavoidably and unexpectedly concerned; there is so much combustible within, and so many temptations arising from without, capable of setting all in a flame; that we cannot be too jealous of ourselves and our circumstances. The Duke of Devonshire's motto (if I mistake not) well suits the Christian, Cavendo tutus. When we can say in the Psalmist's spirit, Hold thou me up, we may warrantably draw his conclusion, and I shall be safe; but the moment we lean to our own understanding, we are in imminent danger of falling. The enemy who wars against our souls, is a consummate master in his way, fertile in stratagems, and equally skilful in carrying on his assaults by sap, or by storm. He studies us, if I may so say, all round, to discover our weak sides, and he is a very Proteus for changing his appearances, and can appear as a sly serpent, a roaring lion, or an Angel of light, as best suits his purpose. It is a great mercy, to be in some measure acquainted with his devices, and aware of them. They who wait humbly upon the Lord, and consult carefully at his word and throne of grace, are made wiser than their enemy, and enabled to escape and withstand his wiles. I know you will not expect me to apologize for putting you in mind of these things, though you know them. I have a double warrant, the love I bear you, and the Lord's command, Heb. iii. 13. Use the like freedom with me, I need it, and hope to be thankful for it, and accept it as one of the best proofs of friendship.

The Lord bless and keep you. Pray for us, and believe me to be,

Sincerely your's.

LETTER II.

MY DEAR SIR,

THE Lord, who mercifully called you out of a state of thoughtless dissipation, and has hitherto been with you, will I trust sweeten all your trials, and cause his light to shine upon your paths. It seems probable, that if you pay a just regard to your father's negative, which I really think he has a right to expect from you, and at the same time make a steady and conscientious use of that negative, which he generously allows you to put upon his proposals, to which I think you have an equal right; I say, while things remain in this situation, and you continue to think differently, it seems probable, that the hour of your exchanging a single for the marriage state, is yet at some distance. But let not this grieve you. The Lord is all-sufficient—a lively sense of his love, a deep impression of eternity, a heart filled with zeal for his cause, and a thirst for the good of souls, will I hope enable you to make a chearful sacrifice, of whatever has no necessary connexion with your peace and his service. And you may rest assured, that whenever he, who loves you better than you do yourself, sees it best for you upon the whole to change your condition, he will bring it about, he will point out the person, prepare the means, and secure the success, by his providence and the power he has over every heart. And you shall see that all previous difficul-

difficulties were either gracious preventions which he threw in the way, to prevent your taking a wrong step, or temporary bars, which, by his removing them afterwards, should give you opportunity of more clearly perceiving his care and interposition in your favor. In the mean time remember your high calling—You are a minister and ambassador of Christ, you are intrusted with the most honorable and important employment, that can engage and animate the heart of man. ταῦτα μελετα, ἐν τῆτοις ἰσθι, επιμενε αὐτοῖς. *

Filled and fired with a constraining sense of the love of Jesus, and the worth of souls, impressed with an ardor to carry war into Satan's kingdom, to storm his strongholds, and rescue his captives; you will have little leisure to think of any thing else. How does the love of glory stimulate the soldier, make him forget and forego a thousand personal tenderesses, and prompt him to cross oceans, to traverse deserts, to scale mountains, and plunge into the greatest hardships and the thickest dangers. They do it for a corruptible crown, a puff of breath, an empty fame; their highest prospect is the applause and favor of their prince. We likewise are soldiers, we have a prince and captain who deserves our all. They who know him, and have hearts to conceive of his excellence, and to feel their obligations to him, cannot indeed seek their own glory, but his glory is dearer to them than a thousand lives. They owe him their souls, for he redeemed them with blood, his own blood; and by his grace he subdued and pardoned them when they were rebels, and in arms against him. Therefore they are not their own, they would not be their own. When his standard is raised, when his enemies are in motion, when his people are to be rescued—they go forth clothed with his panoply, they fight under his eye, they are sure of his support, and he shews them the conqueror's crown. O when they think of that  $\epsilon\upsilon \delta\acute{\upsilon}\lambda\epsilon \alpha\gamma\alpha\theta\epsilon$ , † with which he has promised to welcome them home, when the campaign is over, hard things seem easy, and bitter things sweet, they count nothing, not even their own lives dear, so that they may finish their course with joy. May the Lord make us thus minded. Give us a hearty concern for his business, and he has engaged to take care of ours, and nothing that can conduce to our real comfort and usefulness, shall be withheld.

Believe me to be sincerely your's.

† Well done good servant.

LETTER III.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Dec. 21, 1776.

YOUR letter brought me tidings of joy, and then furnished me with materials for a bonfire upon the occasion. It was an act of passive obedience to burn it, but I did obey. I congratulate you upon the happy issue to which the Lord has brought your affairs. I see that his good Spirit, and good providence have been and are with you. I doubt not but your union with Miss ——, will be a mutual blessing, and, on your part, heightened by being connected with such a family. I could enlarge upon this head, if my letter likewise was to be burnt as soon as you have read it. I look upon the friendship the Lord has given me there, as one of my prime privileges, and I hope I shall always be thankful that it proved a means of introducing you into it.

I congratulate you likewise upon your accession to ——, not because it is a good living, in a genteel neighborhood, and a fine country; but because I believe the Lord sends you there for fulfilling the desires he has given you, of being useful to souls. Church preferment, in any other view, is dreadful, and I would as soon congratulate a man upon seeing a mill-stone tied about his neck, to sink him into the depths of the sea, as upon his obtaining what is called a good living, except I thought him determined to spend and be spent in the cause of the gospel. A parish is an awful mill-stone indeed, to those who see nothing valuable in the flock, but the fleece. But the Lord has impressed your heart with a sense of the glory and importance of his truth, and the worth of souls, and animated your zeal by the most powerful motive, the knowledge of his constraining love. Your case is extraordinary. Perhaps, when you review in your mind the circle of your former gay acquaintance, you may say with Job's servant, I only am escaped alive—The rest are either removed into an eternal state, or are still hurrying down the stream of dissipation, and living without God in the world. Yet there was a time when there seemed no more probability on your side than on theirs, that you should obtain mercy, and be called to the honor of preaching the glorious gospel. You are setting out with every possible advantage—In early life, with a cheerful flow of spirits, affluent circumstances, and now, to crown all, the Lord gives you the very choice of your heart in a partner; one, who besides deserving and meeting your affection, will, I am persuaded, be a real helpmeet to you in your spiritual walk. How much is here to be thankful for.

I trust the Lord has given you, and will maintain in you a right spirit, so as not to rest in his gifts, but to hold them in connection with the love and favor of the giver. It is a low time with us, when the greatest assemblage of earthly blessings, can seem to satisfy us without a real communion with him. His grace is sufficient for you; but undoubtedly such a scene of prosperity as seems to lie before you, is full of snares, and calls for a double effort of watchfulness and prayer. Your situation will fix many eyes upon you, and Satan will doubtless watch you, and examine every corner of the hedge around you, to see if he can find a gap by which to enter. We have but few rich gospel ministers; but it is too evident that he has found a way to damp the zeal and hurt the spirits of some of those few, who for a time acted nobly, and seemed to walk out of the reach of the allurements of the world. I am not jealous of you. I feel a comfortable persuasion, that the Lord has taken a fast hold of your heart, and given you a fast hold of his almighty arm. Yet I believe you will not be displeased with me for dropping a hint of this kind, and at this time.

You have heard of the trial with which the Lord has been pleased to visit us; it still continues, though considerably alleviated. It is tempered with many mercies, and I hope he disposes us in a measure to submission. I trust it will be for good. My dear friend, you are now coming into my school, where you will learn, as occasions offer, to feel more in the person of another than in your own. But be not discouraged; the Lord only afflicts for our good. It is necessary that our sharpest trials should sometimes spring from our dearest comforts, else we should be in danger of forgetting ourselves, and setting up our rest here. In such a world, and with such hearts as we have, we shall often need something to prevent our cleaving to the dust, to quicken us to prayer, and to make us feel that our dependance for one hour's peace, is upon the Lord alone. I am ready to think I have known as much of the good and happiness which this world can afford, as most people who live in it. I never saw the person with whom I wished to exchange in temporals. And for many years past I have thought my trials have been light and few, compared with what many, or most of the Lord's people have endured. And yet, though in the main possessed of my own wishes, when I look back upon the twenty-seven years past, I am ready to stile them, with Jacob, few and evil; and to give the sum total of their contents in Solomon's words—all is vanity. If I take these years to pieces, I see a great part of them was filled up with sins, sorrows and inquietudes. The pleasures too are gone, and have no more real existence than the baseless fabric of a dream. The shadows of the evening will soon begin to come over us, and if our lives are prolonged, a thousand pains and infirmities, from which the Lord has in a remarkable measure exempted us hitherto, will probably overtake us; and at last we must feel the parting pang. Sic transit gloria Mundi. Sin has so envenomed the soil of this earth, that the Amaranth will not grow upon it. But we are hasting to a better world, and bright unclouded skies, where our sun will go down no more, and all tears shall be wiped from our eyes.

I am, very sincerely and affectionately,

Your's, &c.

LETTER IV.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Sept 27, 1777.

MR. —— called on us Thursday evening, and from that hour my thoughts, when awake, have seldom been absent from —— . Few people are better qualified to feel for you, yourself and the family excepted ; perhaps there is no person living more nearly interested in what concerns Mrs. —— than myself. I could not, therefore, at such a time as this, refrain from writing. And glad should I be, if the Lord may help me to drop a suitable word, and accompany it with a blessing to you in the reading.

I am glad to be assured (though I expected no less) that Mrs. —— happily feels herself safe in the Lord's hand, and under the care of the Good Shepherd and Savior, to whom she has often committed herself, and finds him faithful to his promise, giving her strength in her soul according to her day, and enabling her quietly to submit to his holy, wise and gracious will. And it is my prayer, that he may strengthen you likewise, and reveal his own all-sufficiency so clearly and powerfully to your heart, that you may not be afraid of any event, but cheerfully rely upon him, to be all that to you: in every circumstance and change, which his promise warrants you to expect.

I am

I am willing to hope, that this is but a short season of anxiety, appointed for the exercise of your faith and patience, and to give you, in his good time, a signal proof of his power and goodness in answering prayer. He sometimes brings us into such a situation that the help of creatures is utterly unavailing, that we may afterwards be more clearly sensible of his interposition. Then we experimentally learn the vanity of all things here below, and are brought to a more immediate and absolute dependance upon himself. We have need of having these lessons frequently inculcated upon us; but when his end is answered, how often after he has caused grief, does he shew his great compassions, and save us from our fears by an outstretched arm, and such a seasonable and almost unexpected relief, as constrains us to cry out, What has God wrought? and who is a God like unto thee? Such, I hope, will be the issue of your present trial. And that he who gave her to you at first, will restore her to you again. I see you in the furnace, but the Lord is sitting by it as a refiner of silver, to moderate the fire, and manage the process, so that you shall lose nothing but dross, and be brought forth refined as gold to praise his name. Apparent difficulties, however great, are nothing to him. If he speaks it is done, for to God the Lord belong the issues from death. Should his pleasure be otherwise, and should he call your dear partner to a state of glory before you—still I know he is able to support you. What he does, however painful to the flesh, must be right, because he does it. Having bought

bought us with his blood, and saved our souls from hell, he has every kind of right to dispose of us and ours as he pleases, and this we are sure of, he will not lay so much upon us as he freely endured for us; and he can make us amends for all we suffer, and for all we lose, by the light of his countenance. A few years will set all to rights, and they who love him and are beloved by him, though they may suffer as others, shall not sorrow as others, for the Lord will be with them here, and he will soon have them with him: there all tears shall be wiped from their eyes.

Perhaps I know as well how to calculate the pain of such a separation, as any one who has not actually experienced it. Many a time the desire of my eyes has been threatened, many a time my heart has been brought low, but from what I have known at such seasons, I have reason to hope, that had it been his pleasure to bring upon me the thing that I feared, his everlasting arm would have upheld me from sinking under the stroke. As ministers, we are called to comfort the Lord's afflicted people, and to tell them the knowledge of his love is a cordial able to keep the soul alive under the sharpest trials; we must not wonder that he sometimes puts us in a way of shewing, that we do not deal in unfelt truths, but that we find ourselves that solid consolation in the gospel, which we encourage others to expect from it. You have now such an occasion of glorifying the Lord; I pray he may enable you to improve it, and that all around you may see that he is with you, and that his good-word is the support and anchor of your soul. Then I am sure, if it upon the whole is best for you, he will give you the desire of your heart, and you shall yet live to praise him together.

I am your obliged,

and affectionate servant.

D E A R S I R,

YOU see I have prevented you in your promise of writing first; and having found a pretext for troubling Mr. ———, I was willing to venture upon you without any, unless you will let me plead a desire of shewing you, how welcome your correspondence would be to me. I know not if my heart was ever more united to any person, in so short a space of time, than to you; and what engaged me so much was, the spirit of meekness and of love (that peculiar and inimitable mark of true Christianity) which I observed in you. I mean it not to your praise. May all the praise be to him, from whom every good and perfect gift cometh, who alone maketh the best to differ from the worst; but I think I may well mention, to your encouragement; that all who conversed with you; greatly regret your speedy departure; and I am persuaded, the same temper; the same candour, will make you acceptable, honorable and useful; wherever you go.

Blessed.

Blessed are the poor in spirit, the meek, the merciful, and the peace-makers, they shall obtain the mercy they want, and possess the peace they love. They shall inherit the earth. The earth, sinful and miserable as it is, shall be worthy to be called an inheritance to them, for they shall enjoy a comparative heaven in it. They shall be called the children of God, though dignified with no title among men. Alas, how much are these things overlooked, even by many, who, I would hope, are real believers. Methinks a very different spirit from that of the church of Laodicea, is to be seen amongst us, though perhaps it is not easy to say which is the best of the two. That was neither cold nor hot, this (mirabile dictu) is both cold and hot at once, and both to the extreme. Hot, hasty and arbitrary, in those few things where mediocrity is a virtue; but cool and remiss in those great points, where the application of the whole heart and soul and mind and strength is so absolutely necessary, and so positively enjoined. Surely there is too much room for this observation, and I perhaps stand self-condemned in making it.

I hope you will take opportunity to improve your interest in Mr. ———, by letter. He expressed much satisfaction in the hour he spent with you before you sailed, and a great regard for you; therefore would, I doubt not, give you a fair hearing; and the phrase littera scripta manet is true, in more senses than one. He makes such large concessions sometimes, that I am apt to think he is conscious of the weakness of his own argument, and then he is as soon angry with himself, for complying so far, and flies off to the other extreme. Yet for the most part, when he speaks plain, and is not restrained by complaisance for particular persons, he appears not only a stranger to experimental religion, but averse to the notion, and generally inclined to treat it with levity. His obstacles are very many and very great, his reputation as a learned man, his years, his regular life, and perhaps above all, his performances in print, especially his last book, are so many barriers, that must be broke through before conviction can reach him. But the grace of God can do all this and more, and indeed when I think of the many truly valuable parts of his character, and the indefatigable pains he has taken in his researches after truth, I am willing to hope, that the Lord will at length teach him the true wisdom, and enable him (however hard it may seem) to give up his own attainments, and sit down like a little child at the feet of Jesus.

I hope to hear soon and often from you. I number my Christian correspondents among my principal blessings, a few judicious, pious friends, to whom, when I can get leisure to write, I send my heart by turns. I can trust them with my inmost sentiments, and can write with no more disguise than I think. I shall rejoice to add you to the number, if you can agree to take me as I am, (as I think you will) and suffer me to commit my whole self to paper, without respect to names, parties and sentiments. I endeavor to observe my Lord's commands, to call no man master upon earth, yet I desire to own and honor the image of God, wherever I find it. I dare not say I have no bigotry, for I know not myself, and remember to my shame, that formerly, when I ignorantly professed myself free from it, I was indeed over-run with it; but this I can say, I allow it not, I strive and pray against it, and thus far, by the grace of God, I have attained; that I find my heart as much united to many, who differ from me in some points, as to any who agree with me in all. I set no value upon any doctrinal truth, farther than it has a tendency to promote practical holiness. If others should think those things hindrances, which I judge to be helps in this respect, I am content they should go on in their own way, according to the light God has given them, provided they will agree with me ἐν τῷ Ἐπ'ἀνάγκης. If it should be asked, Which are the necessary things? I answer, Those in which the spiritual worshippers of all ages and countries have been agreed. Those on the contrary are mere subordinate matters, in which the best men, those who have been the most eminent for faith, prayer, humility and nearness to God, always have been, and still are, divided in their judgments. Upon this plan, I should think it no hard matter to draw up a form of sound words, (whether dignified with the name of a creed or no, I care not) to which true believers, of all sorts and sizes, would unanimously subscribe. Suppose it ran something in the following manner. I believe that sin is the most hateful thing in the world; that I and all men are by nature in a state of wrath and depravity, utterly unable to sustain the penalty, or to fulfil the commands of God's holy law; and that we have no sufficiency of ourselves to think a good thought. I believe that Jesus Christ is the chief among ten thousands; that he came into the world world to save the chief of sinners, by making a propitiation for sin by his death, by paying a perfect obedience to the law, in our behalf; and that he is now exalted on high, to give repentance and remission of sins to all that believe, and that he ever liveth to make intercession for us. I believe that the Holy Spirit, (the gift of God, through Jesus Christ) is the sure and only guide into all truth, and the common privilege of all believers; and under his influence, I believe the holy scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation, and to furnish us thoroughly for every good work. I believe that love to God, and to man for God's sake, is the essence of religion, and the fulfilling of the law; that without holiness no man shall see the Lord; that those who by a patient course in well doing, seek glory, honor and immortality, shall receive eternal life; and I believe that this reward is not of debt, but of grace, even to the praise and glory of that grace, whereby he has made us accepted in the Beloved. Amen.

I pretend not to accuracy in this hasty draught, they are only outlines, which if you please to retouch, and fill up at your leisure, I hope you will favor me with a sight of it. I fear I have tired you. Shall only add my prayers, that the Lord may be with you, and crown your labors of love with success, that you may hereafter shine among those who have been instrumental in turning many to righteousness.

I am, dear Sir,

Your's in the Lord.

D E A R S I R,

TH E account which I received by Mr. C——, and by the letter which he brought from you, of your welfare and the welfare of your people was very pleasing. Though, indeed, no more than I expected. I believed from the first of your going to S——, that you would like the people, and I believed the Lord had given you that frame of spirit which he has promised to bless. What reason have we to praise him for the knowledge of his gospel, and for the honor of being called to preach it to others; and likewise that he has been pleased to cast your lot and mine amongst a people who value it, and to crown our poor labors with some measure of acceptance and usefulness. How little did we think, in the unawakened part of our life, to what it was his good pleasure to reserve us!

The

The Lord is pleased, in a measure, to shew me the suitableness and necessity of an humble dependant frame of heart; a ceasing from self, and a reliance upon him in the due use of appointed means; I am far from having attained, but I hope I am pressing, at least seeking after it. I wish to speak the word simply and experimentally, and to be so engaged with the importance of the subject, the worth of souls, and the thought that I am speaking in the name and presence of the Most High God, as that I might, if possible, forget every thing else. This would be an attainment indeed!—More good might be expected from a broken discourse, delivered in such a frame, than from the most advantageous display of knowledge and gifts without it. Not that I would undervalue propriety and pertinence of expression—It is our duty to study to find out acceptable words, and to endeavor to appear as workmen that need not be ashamed; but those who have most ability in this way, have need of a double guard of grace and wisdom, lest they be tempted to trust in it, or to value themselves upon it. They that trust in the Lord shall never be moved, and they that abase themselves before him he will exalt. I am well persuaded that your conduct and views have been agreeable to these sentiments, and therefore the Lord has supported, encouraged, and owned you, and I trust he will still bless you; and make you a blessing to many. He that walketh humbly walketh surely.

LETTER II.

MY DEAR SIR,

YOUR letter did me good when I received it, at least gave me much pleasure; and I think it has given me a lift while I have been just now reading it. I know not that I ever had those awful views of sin which you speak of, and though I believe I should be better for them, I dare not seriously wish for them. There is a petition which I have heard in public prayer, Lord shew us the evil of our hearts. To this petition I cannot venture to set my Amen, at least not without a qualification—Shew me enough of thyself to ballance the view, and then shew me what thou pleasest. I think I have a very clear and strong conviction in my judgment that I am vile and worthless, that my heart is full of evil, only evil, and that continually. I know something of it too experimentally, and therefore judging of the whole by the sample, though I am not suitably affected with what I do see, I tremble at the thought of seeing more. A man may look with some pleasure upon the sea in a storm, provided he stands safe upon the land himself, but to be upon the sea in a storm is quite another thing. And yet, surely, the coldness, worldliness, pride and twenty other evils under which I groan, owe much of their strength to the want of that feeling sense of my own abominations with which you have been favored, I say favored—for I doubt not but the Lord gave it you in mercy, and that it has proved and will prove a mercy to you, to make you more humble, spiritual and dependant, as well as to increase your ability for preaching the gospel of his grace. Upon these accounts I can assure you, that upon a first reading, and till I stopped a moment to count the cost, I was ready to envy you all that you had felt. I often seem to know what the scripture teaches both of sin and grace, as if I knew them not; so faint and languid are my perceptions. I often seem to think and talk of sin without any sorrow, and of grace without any joy.

I have had some people awakened by dreams, as you had by streamers; but for ought I know, we are no less instrumental to the good of these, than to any other person, upon whom when we look, our hearts are ready to exult and say, See what the Lord has done by me. I do not think that, strictly speaking, all the streamers of the North are able to awaken a dead soul. I suppose people may be terrified by them, and made thoughtful, but awakened only by the word. The streamers either sent them to hear the gospel, or refused them to attend to it, but it was the knowledge of the truth brought home to the heart, that did the business. Perhaps the streamers reminded them of what they had heard from you before. Two persons here, who lived like heathens and never came to church, were alarmed by some terrifying dreams, and came out to hearing forthwith; there the Lord was pleased to meet with them. One of them died triumphing; the other, I hope, will do so when her time comes.

Whatever means, instruments or occasions he is pleased to employ, the work is all his own, and I trust you and I are made willing to give him all the glory, and to sink into the dust at the thought that he should ever permit us to take his holy name upon our polluted lips.

I am, dear Sir,

LETTER III.

MY DEAR SIR,

YOU say that your experience agrees with mine. It must be so, because our hearts are alike. The heart is deceitful and desperately wicked, destitute of good and prone to evil. This is the character of mankind universally, and those who are made partakers of grace are renewed but in part; the evil nature still cleaves to them, and the root of sin, though mortified, is far from being dead.—While the cause remains it will have effects, and while we are burdened with the body of this death, we must groan under it. But we need not be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow, since we have in Jesus, a Savior, a Righteousness, an Advocate, a Shepherd. He knows our frame, and remembers that we are but dust. If sin abounds in us, grace abounds much more in him; nor would he suffer sin to remain in his people, if he did not know how to over-rule it, and make it an occasion of endearing his love and grace so much the more to their souls. The Lord forbid that we should plead his goodness as an encouragement to sloth and indifference. Humiliation, godly sorrow and self-abasement become us—but at the same time we may rejoice in the Lord. Though sin remains, it shall not have dominion over us; though it wars in us, it shall not prevail against us. We have a mercy-seat sprinkled with blood, we have an advocate cate with the Father, we are called to this warfare, and we fight under the eye of the Captain of our Salvation, who is always near to renew our strength, to heal our wounds, and to cover our heads in the heat of battle. As ministers, we preach to those who have like passions and infirmities with ourselves, and by our own feelings, fears and changes, we learn to speak a word in season to them that are weary, to warn those who stand, and to stretch out a hand of compassion towards them that are fallen, and to commend it to others, from our own experience, as a faithful saying, that Jesus came to save the chief of sinners. Besides, if the Lord is pleased to give us some liberty, acceptance and success in preaching the gospel, we should be in great danger of running mad with spiritual pride, if the Lord did not permit us to feel the depravity and vileness of our hearts, and thereby keep us from forgetting what we are in ourselves.

With regard to your young people, you must expect to meet with some disappointment. Perhaps not every one of whom you have conceived hopes will stand, and some who do belong to the Lord are permitted to make sad mistakes for their future humiliation. It is our part to watch, warn and admonish, and we ought likewise to be concerned for those slips and miscarriages which we cannot prevent. A minister, if faithful and of a right spirit, can have no greater joy than to see his people walking honorably and steadily in the truth; and hardly any thing will give him more sensible grief, than to see any of them taken in Satan's wiles. Yet still the gospel brings relief here. He is wiser than we are, and knows how to make those things subservient to promote his work, which we ought to guard against as evils and hindrances. We are to use the means—He is to rule the whole. If the faults of some are made warnings to others, and prove in the end occasions of illustrating the riches of Divine Grace, this should reconcile us to what we cannot help, though such considerations should not slacken our diligence in sounding an alarm, and reminding our hearers of their continual danger.

I am, dear Sir,

Affectionately your's,

LET-

LETTER IV.

DEAR SIR,

I LATELY read a sermon of Mr. Baxter's (in the fifth volume of the morning exercises) on Matt. v. 16. My mind is something impressed with the subject, and with his manner of treating it. Some of Mr. Baxter's sentiments in divinity are rather cloudy, and he sometimes upon that account met with but poor quarter from the staunch Calvinists of his day. But by what I have read of him, where he is quiet and not ruffled by controversy, he appears to me, notwithstanding some mistakes, to have been one of the greatest men of his age, and perhaps in fervor, spirituality and success, more than equal both as a minister and a christian, to some twenty taken together, of those who affect to undervalue him in this present day. There is a spirit in some passages of his Saint's Rest, his Dying Thoughts, and other of his practical treatises, compared with which, many modern compositions, though well written and well meant, appear to me to a great disadvantage. But I was speaking of his sermon. He points out the way at which we should aim to let our light shine in the world, for the glory of God, and the conviction and edification of men. I have mentioned where it is to be found, that, if you have the Morning Exercises, or they should come in your way, you may look at it. I think you would like it. The perusal suggested to me some instruction, and much reproof. Alas, my friend, are we not too often chargeable with a sad, shameful selfishness and narrowness of spirit, far, very far different from that activity, enlargement and generosity of soul, which such a gospel as we have received might be expected to produce? For myself, I must plead guilty. It seems as if my heart was always awake, and keenly sensible to my own concerns, while those of my Lord and Master affect me much less forcibly, at least only by intervals. Were a stranger to judge of me by what I sometimes say in the pulpit, he might think that, like the Angels, I had but two things in view—to do the will of God, and to behold his face. But, alas, would he not be almost as much mistaken, as if, seeing Mr. G—— in the character of a tragedy hero, he should suppose him to be the very person whom he only represents. I hope Satan will never be able to persuade me that I am a mere hypocrite and stage player; but sure I am, that there is so much hypocrisy in me, so many littlenesses and self-seekings insinuating into my plan of conduct, that I have humbling cause to account myself unworthy and unprofitable, and to say, Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O Lord. I have some tolerable idea of what a Christian ought to be, and it is, I hope, what I desire to be. A Christian should be conformable to Christ in his spirit, and in his practice—That is, he should be spiritually-minded, dead to the world, filled with zeal for the glory of God, the spread of the gospel and the good of souls. He should be humble, patient, meek, chearful, thankful.

thankful under all events and changes.—He should account it the business and honor of his life, to imitate him who pleased not himself, who went about doing good, and has expressed to us the very feelings of his heart, in that divine aphorism, which surpasses all the fine admired sayings of the philosophers, as much as the sun outshines a candle; It is more blessed to give than to receive. The whole deportment of a Christian should shew that the knowledge of Jesus, which he has received from the gospel, affords him all he could expect from it.—A balm for every grief, an amends for every loss, a motive for every duty, a restraint from every evil, a pattern for every thing which he is called to do or suffer, and a principle sufficient to constitute the actions of every day, even in common life, acts of religion. He should (as the children of this world are wise to do in their generation) make every occurrence through which he passes subservient and subordinate to his main design. Gold is the worldly man's god, and his worship and service are uniform and consistent, not by fits and starts, but from morning to night, from the beginning to the end of the year, he is the same man. He will not slip an opportunity of adding to his pelf to-day, because he may have another to-morrow, but he heartily and eagerly embraces both. And so far as he carries his point, though his perseverance may expose him to the ridicule or reproach of his neighbors, he thinks himself well paid, and says,

I am sincerely your's.

LETTER V.

DEAR SIR,

I MAY learn (only I am a sad dunce) by small and common incidents, as well as by some more striking and important turns in life, that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. It is not for me to say, to-day or to-morrow I will do this or that. I cannot write a letter to a friend without leave or without help, for neither opportunity or ability are at my own disposal. It is not needful that the Lord should raise a mountain in my way, to stop my purpose; if he only withdraw a certain kind of imperceptible support, which in general I have, and use without duly considering whose it is—then, in a moment, I feel myself unstrung and disabled, like a ship that has lost her masts, and cannot proceed till he is pleased to refit me and renew my strength. My pride and propensity to self-dependance render frequent changes of this kind necessary to me, or I should soon forget what I am, and sacrifice to my own drag. Therefore, upon the whole, I am satisfied, and see it best that I should be absolutely poor and penniless in myself, and forced to depend upon the Lord for the smallest things as well as the greatest. And if, by his blessing, my experience should at length tally with my judgment in this point, that without him I can do nothing; then I know I shall find it easy, through him, him, to do all things; for the door of his mercy is always open, and it is but ask and have. But, alas, a secret persuasion (though contrary to repeated convictions) that I have something at home, too often prevents me going to him for it, and then no wonder I am disappointed. The life of faith seems so simple and easy in theory, that I can point it out to others in few words; but in practice it is very difficult, and my advances are so slow that I hardly dare say I get forward at all. It is a great thing indeed to have the spirit of a little child, so as to be habitually afraid of taking a single step without leading.

I have heard of you more than once since I heard from you, and am glad to know the Lord is still with you: I trust he has not withdrawn wholly from us. We have much call for thankfulness, and much for humiliation. Some have been removed, some are evidently ripening for glory, and now and then we have a new enquirer—But the progress of wickedness amongst the unconverted here is awful. Convictions repeatedly stifled in many, have issued in a hardness and boldness in sinning, which, I believe, is seldom found but in those places where the light of the gospel has been long resisted and abused. If my eyes suitably affected my heart, I should weep day and night upon this account; but, alas, I am too indifferent. I feel a woeful defect in my zeal for God, and compassion for souls; and when Satan and conscience charge me with cowardice, treachery and stupidity, I know not what to reply. I am generally carried through my public work with some liberty, and because I am not put to shame before the people I seem content and satisfied. I wish to be more thankful for what the Lord is pleased to do amongst us; but, at the same time, to be more earnest with him for a farther out-pouring of his Spirit. Assist me herein with your prayers.

As to my own private experience, the enemy is not suffered to touch the foundation of my faith and hope; thus far I have peace—but my conflicts and exercises, with the effects of indwelling sin, are very distressing. I cannot doubt of my state and acceptance, and yet it seems no one can have more cause for doubts and fears than myself, if such doubtings were at all encouraged by the gospel—but I see they are not. I see that what I want and hope for, the Lord promises to do for his own name sake, and with a non obstante to all my vileness and perverseness; and I cannot question but he has given me (for how else could I have it) a thirst for that communion with him in love and conformity to his image, of which, as yet, I have experienced but very faint and imperfect beginnings. But if he has begun, I venture, upon his word, that he will not forsake the work of his own hands.

On public affairs I say but little—Many are censuring men and measures, but I would lay all the blame upon sin. It appears plain to me, that the Lord has a controversy with us, and therefore I fear what we have yet seen is but the beginning of sorrows. I am ready to dread the event of this summer, but I remember the Lord reigns. He has his own glory and the good of his church in view, and will not be disappointed. He knows how likewise to take care of those who fear him. I wish there was more sighing and mourning amongst professors, for the sins of the nation and the churches. But I must conclude,

And am, sincerely,

Your affectionate friend.

January — 1776.

LETTER VI.

DEAR SIR,

NO very considerable alteration has taken place since I wrote, except the death of Mrs. L—, who was removed to a better world in September last. The latter part of her course was very painful, but the Lord made her more than conqueror, and she had good cause to apply the Apostle's words, 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. She repeated that passage in her last illness, and chose it for her funeral text. She was a Christian indeed. Her faith was great, and so were her trials. Now she is above them all. Now she is before the throne. The good Lord help us to be followers of those, who through faith and patience have attained to the hope set before them.

The number of professors still increases with us, and a greater number of persons affords a greater variety of cases, and gives greater scope to observe the workings of the heart and Satan. For seven years I had to say, that I had not seen a person of whom I had conceived a good hope go back, but I have met with a few disappointments since. However, upon the whole, I trust the Lord is still with us. The enemy tries to disturb and defile us, and if the Lord did not keep the city, the poor watchman would wake in vain. But the eye, that never slumbereth nor sleepeth, has been upon us for good. And though we have cause of humiliation and complaint, we have likewise much cause of thankfulness. My health is still preserved, and I hope that the Lord does not suffer my desires of personal communion with him, and of usefulness in the ministry, to decline. He supplies me with fresh strength and matter in my public work; I hear now and then of one brought to enquire the way, and his presence is at times made known to many in the ordinances.

To combine zeal with prudence, is indeed difficult. There is often too much self in our zeal, and too much of the fear of man in our prudence. However, what we cannot attain by any skill or resolution of our own, we may hope in measure to receive from him who giveth liberally to those who seek him, and desire to serve him. Prudence is a word much abused, but there is a heavenly wisdom, which the Lord has promised to give to those who humbly wait upon him for it. It does not consist in forming a bundle of rules and maxims, but in a spiritual taste and discernment, derived from an experimental knowledge of the truth, and of the heart of man, as described in the word of God; and its exercise consists much in a simple dependance upon the Lord, to guide and prompt us in every action. We seldom act wrong, when we truly depend upon him, and can cease from leaning to our own understanding. When the heart is thus in a right tune and frame, and his word dwells richly in us, there is a kind of immediate perception of what is proper for us to do, in present circumstances, without much painful enquiry; a light shines before us upon the path of duty, and if he permits us in such a spirit to make some mistakes, he will likewise teach us to profit by them; and our reflections upon what was wrong one day, will make us to act more wisely the next. At the best, we must always expect to meet with new proofs of our own weakness and insufficiency; otherwise, how should we be kept humble, or know how to prize the liberty he allows us of coming to the throne of grace, for fresh forgiveness and direction every day? But if he enables us to walk before him with a single eye, he will graciously accept our desire of serving him better if we could, and his blessing will make our feeble endeavors in some degree successful, at the same time that we see defects and evils attending our best services, sufficient to make us ashamed of them.

I am, sincerely,

Your affectionate friend;

LETTER VII.

DEAR SIR,

WE all need, and at the seasons the Lord sees best, we all receive chastisement. I hope you likewise have reason to praise him, for supporting, sanctifying and delivering mercy. The coward flesh presently shrinks under the rod, but faith need not fear it, for it is in the hand of one who loves us better than we do ourselves, and who knows our frame that we are but dust, and therefore will not suffer us to be over-done and overwhelmed.

I feel, as a friend should feel, for Mr. B——; were I able, I would soon send him health. If the Lord, who is able to remove his illness in a minute, permits it to continue, we may be sure upon the whole it will be better for him. It is, however, very lawful to pray that his health may be restored, and his usefulness prolonged. I beg you to give my love to him, and tell him that my heart bears him an affectionate remembrance; and I know the God whom he serves, will make every dispensation supportable and profitable to him.

If, as you observe, the Song of Solomon describes the experience of his church, it shews the dark as well as the bright side. No one part of it is the experience of every individual at any particular time. Some are in his banquetting-house, others upon their beds. Some sit under his banner, supported:

supported by his arm, while others have a faint perception of him at a distance, with many a hill and mountain between. In one thing, however, they all agree, that he is the leading object of their desires, and that they have had such a discovery of his person, work and love, as makes him precious to their hearts. Their judgment of him is always the same, but their sensibility varies. The love they bear him, though rooted and grounded in their hearts, is not always equally in exercise, nor can it be so.—We are like trees, which, though alive, cannot put forth their leaves and fruit without the influence of the sun. They are alive in winter as well as in summer, but how different is their appearance in these different seasons. Were we always alike, could we always believe, love and rejoice, we should think the power inherent and our own; but it is more for the Lord's glory, and more suited to form us to a temper becoming the gospel, that we should be made deeply sensible of our own inability and dependance, than that we should be always in a lively frame. I am persuaded a broken and a contrite spirit, a conviction of our vileness and nothingness, connected with a cordial acceptance of Jesus, as revealed in the gospel, is the highest attainment we can reach in this life. Sensible comforts are desirable, and we must be sadly declined when they do not appear so to us; but I believe there may be a real exercise of faith and growth in grace, when our sensible feelings are faint and low. A soul may be in as thriving a state when thirsting, seeking and mourning after the Lord, as when actually rejoicing in him—as much in earnest when fighting in the valley, as when singing upon the mount; nay, dark seasons afford the surest and strongest manifestations of the power of faith. To hold fast the word of promise, to maintain a hatred of sin, to go on steadfastly in the path of duty, in defiance both of the frowns and the smiles of the world, when we have but little comfort, is a more certain evidence of grace, than a thousand things which we may do or forbear when our spirits are warm and lively. I have seen many who have been upon the whole but uneven walkers, though at times they have seemed to enjoy, at least have talked of great comforts. I have seen others, for the most part, complain of much darkness and coldness, who have been remarkably humble, tender and exemplary in their spirit and conduct. Surely were I to chuse my lot, it should be with the latter.

I am, sincerely and affectionately, your's,

MADAM,

IT would be both unkind and ungrateful in me, to avail myself of any plea of business, for delaying the acknowledgment I owe you for your acceptable favor from ———, which though dated the 6th instant, I did not receive till the 10th:

Could I have known in time, that you was at Mr. ———, I should have endeavored to have called upon you while there, and very glad should I have been to have seen you with us. But they who fear the Lord may be sure, that whatever is not practicable, is not necessary. He could have over-ruled every difficulty in your way, had he seen it expedient. But he is pleased to shew you that you depend not upon men, but upon himself, and that, notwithstanding your connections may exclude you from some advantages in point of outward means, he who has began a good work in you, is able to carry it on, in defiance of all seeming hindrances, and make all things (even those which have the most unfavorable appearances) work together for your good.

A sure effect of his grace, is a desire and longing for gospel ordinances, and when they are afforded, they cannot be neglected without loss. But the Lord sees many souls who are dear to him, and whom he is training up in a growing meetness for his kingdom, who are by his providence so situated, that it is not in their power to attend upon gospel preaching; and perhaps they have seldom either Christian minister or Christian friend to assist or comfort them. Such a situation is a state of trial; but Jesus is all-sufficient, and he is always near. They cannot be debarred from his word of grace, which is every where at hand, nor from his throne of grace, for they who feel their need of him, and whose hearts are drawn towards him, are always at the foot of it. Every room in the house, yea every spot they stand on, fields, lanes and hedgerows, all is holy ground to them, for the Lord is there. The chief difference between us, and the disciples, when our Savior was upon earth, is in this: They then walked by sight, and we are called to walk by faith. They could see him with their bodily eyes, we cannot; but he said before he left them, "It is expedient for you that I go away." How could this be, unless that spiritual communion which he promised to maintain with his people, after his ascension, were preferable to that intercourse he allowed them whilst he was visibly with them? But we are sure it is preferable, and they who had tried both, were well satisfied he had made good his promise; so that though they had known him after the flesh, they were content not to know him so any more. Yes, Madam, though we cannot see him, he sees us, he is nearer to us than we are to ourselves. In a natural state, we have very dark, and indeed dishonorable thoughts of God. We conceive of him as at a distance. But when the heart is awakened, we begin to make Jacob's reflection, Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not. And when we receive faith, we begin to know that this ever-present God is in Christ, that the government of heaven and earth, the dispensations of the kingdom of nature, providence and grace, are in the hands of Jesus, that it is he with whom we have to do, who once suffered agony and death for our redemption, and whose compassion and tenderness are the same, now he reigns over all blessed for ever, as when he conversed amongst men in the days of his humiliation. Thus God is made known to us by the gospel, in the endearing views of a Savior, a Shepherd, a Husband, a Friend, and a way of access is opened for us through the veil, that is, the human nature of our Redeemer, to enter with humble confidence into the holiest of all; and to repose all our cares and concerns upon the strength of that everlasting arm, which upholds heaven and earth, and upon that infinite love which submitted to the shame, pain and death of the cross, to redeem sinners from wrath and misery.

Though there is a height, a breadth, a length and a depth, in this mystery of redeeming love, exceeding the comprehension of all finite minds, yet the great and leading principles, which are necessary for the support and comfort of our souls, may be summed up in a very few words. Such a summary we are favored with in Titus ii. 11—14. where the whole of salvation, all that is needful to be known, experienced, practiced and hoped for, is comprized within the compass of four verses. If many books, much study and great discernment were necessary in order to be happy, what must the poor and simple do? Yet for them especially is the gospel designed, and few but such as these attain the knowledge and comfort of it. The Bible is a sealed book till the heart be awakened, and then, He that runs may read. The propositions are few; I am a sinner, therefore I need a Savior. One who is able and willing to save to the uttermost, such a one is Jesus. He is all that I want, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. But will he receive me? Can I answer a previous question? Am I willing to receive him? If so, and if his word may be taken, if he meant what he said, and promised no more than he can perform, I may be sure of a welcome; he knew long before the doubts, fears and suspicions, which would arise in my mind when I should come to know what I am, what I have done, and what I have deserved; and therefore, he declared before he left the earth, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." I have no money or price in my hand, no worthiness to recommend me, and I need none, for he saveth freely for his own name sake. I have only to be thankful for what he has already shewn me, and to wait upon him for more. It is my part

to commit myself to him as the physician of sin-sick souls, not to prescribe to him how he shall treat me—To begin, carry on and perfect the cure is his part.

The doubts and fears you speak of, are, in a greater or less degree, the common experience of all the Lord's people, at least for a time; whilst any unbelief remains in the heart, and Satan is permitted to tempt, we shall feel these things. In themselves, they are groundless and evil, yet the Lord permits and over-rules them for good. They tend to make us know more of the plague of our own hearts, and feel more sensibly the need of a Savior, and make his rest (when we attain it) doubly sweet and sure. And they likewise qualify us for pitying and comforting others. Fear not, only believe, wait and pray. Expect not all at once. A Christian is not of hasty growth, like a mushroom, but rather like the oak, the progress of which is hardly perceptible, but in time becomes a great deep-rooted tree. If my writings have been useful to you, may the Lord have the praise. To administer any comfort to his children, is the greatest honor and pleasure I can receive in this life. I cannot promise to be a very punctual correspondent, having many engagements, but I hope to do all in my power to shew myself, Madam,

LETTER II.

MADAM,

THOUGH in general I think myself tolerably punctual when I can answer a letter in six or seven weeks after the receipt, yet I feel some pain for not having acknowledged your's sooner. A case like that which you have favored me with an account of, deserved an immediate attention, and when I read it, I proposed writing within a post or two, and I can hardly allow any plea of business to be sufficient excuse for delaying it so long; but our times are in the Lord's hands, may he now enable me to send you what may prove a word in season.

Your exercises have been by no means singular, though they may appear so to yourself, because in your retired situation, you have not (as you observe) had much opportunity of knowing the experience of other Christians; nor has the guilt with which your mind has been so greatly burdened been properly your own. It was a temptation forced upon you by the enemy, and he shall answer for it. Undoubtedly it is a mournful proof of the depravity of our nature, that there is that within us which renders us so easily susceptible of his suggestions; a proof of our extreme weakness, that after the clearest and most satisfying evidences of the truth, we are not able to hold fast our confidence, if the Lord permits Satan to sift and shake us. But I can assure you

these changes are not uncommon. I have know<sup>n</sup> persons, who, after walking with God comfortably in the main for forty years, have been at their wit's end from such assaults as you mention, and been brought to doubt; not only of the reality of their own hopes, but of the very ground and foundation upon which their hopes were built. Had you remained; as it seems you once were, attached to the vanities of a gay and dissipated life, or could you have been content with a form of godliness, destitute of the power, it is probable you would have remained a stranger to these troubles. Satan would have employed his arts in a different and less perceptible way, to have soothed you into a false peace, and prevented any thought or suspicion of danger from arising in your mind. But when he could no longer detain you in his bondage, or seduce you back again into the world, then of course he would change his method, and declare open war against you. A specimen of his power and malice you have experienced, and the Lord whom you loved, because he first loved you, permitted it, not to gratify Satan, but for your benefit—to humble and prove you, to shew you what is in your heart, and to do you good in the issue. These things, for the present, are not joyous but grievous; yet in the end they yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness. In the mean time his eye is upon you; he has appointed bounds both to the degree and the duration of the trial; and he does and will afford you such supports, that you shall not be tried beyond what you are enabled to bear. I doubt not but your conflicts and sorrows will in due time terminate in praise and victory, and be sanctified to your fuller establishment in the truth.

I greatly rejoice in the Lord's goodness to your dying parent. How wisely timed and how exactly suited was that affecting dispensation, to break the force of those suggestions with which the enemy was aiming to overwhelm your spirit. He could not stand against such an illustrious demonstrative attestation, that the doctrines you had embraced were not cunningly devised fables. He could proceed no farther in that way; but he is fruitful in resources. His next attempt of course was to fix guilt upon your conscience, as if you had yourself formed and willingly entertained those thoughts, which, indeed, you suffered with extreme reluctance and pain. Here, likewise, I find he succeeded for a time, but he who broke the former snare, will deliver you from this likewise.

The dark and dishonorable thoughts of God, which I hinted at, as belonging to a natural state, are very different from the thoughts of your heart concerning him. You do not conceive of him as a hard master, or think you could be more happy in the breach than in the observance of his precepts. You do not prefer the world to his favor, or think you can please him, and make amends for your sins by an obedience of your own. These, and such as these, are the thoughts of the natural heart—the very reverse of your's. One thought, however, I confess you have indulged, which is no less dishonorable to the Lord than uncomfortable to yourself. You say, "I dare not believe that God will not impute to me as sin, the admission of thoughts which

my soul ever abhorred, and to which my will never consented." Nay, you fear least they should not only be imputed, but unpardonable. But how can this be possible! Indeed I will not call it your thought, it is your temptation. You tell me you have children. Then you will easily feel a plain illustration, which just now occurs to me—Let me suppose a case which has sometimes happened; a child, three or four years of age we will say, while playing incautiously at a little distance from home, should be suddenly seized and carried away by a Gipsy. Poor thing! how terrified, how distressed must it be? Methinks I hear its cries. The sight and violence of the stranger, the recollection of its dear parents, the loss of its pleasing home, the dread and uncertainty of what is yet to befall it—Is it not a wonder that it does not die in agonies? But see, help is at hand! The Gipsy is pursued, and the child recovered. Now, my dear Madam, permit me to ask you, if this were your child, how would you receive it? Perhaps, when the first transports of your joy for its safety would permit you, you might gently chide it for leaving your door— But would you disinherit it? Would you disown it? Would you deliver it up again to the Gipsy with your own hands, because it had suffered a violence which it could not withstand, which it abhorred, and to which its will never consented? And yet what is the tenderness of a mother, of ten thousand mothers, to that which our compassionate Savior bears to every poor soul that has been enabled to flee to him for salvation? Let us be far from charging that to him, of which we think we are utterly incapable ourselves. Take courage, Madam; resist the devil and he will flee from you. If he were to tempt you to any thing criminal, you would start at the thought, and renounce it with abhorrence. Do the same when he tempts you to question the Lord's compassion and goodness. But there he imposes upon us with a shew of humility, and persuades us, that we do well to oppose our unworthiness as a sufficient exception to the many express promises of the word. It is said, the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin; that all manner of sin shall be forgiven for his sake; that whoever cometh he will in no wise cast out, and that he is able to save to the uttermost. Believe his word, and Satan shall be found a liar. If the child had deliberately gone away with the Gipsy; had preferred that wretched way of life; had refused to return, though frequently and tenderly invited home; perhaps a parent's love might, in time, be too weak to plead for the pardon of such continued obstinacy. But, indeed, in this manner we have all dealt with the Lord, and yet whenever we are willing to return, he is willing to receive us with open arms, and without an upbraiding word, Luke xv. 20—22. Though our sins have been deep-dyed like scarlet and crimson, enormous as mountains, and countless as the sands, the sum total is but sin has abounded; but where sin hath abounded, grace has much more abounded. After all, I know the Lord keeps the key of comfort in his own hands, yet he has commanded us to attempt comforting one another. I should rejoice to be his instrument of administering comfort to you. I shall hope to hear from you soon, and that you will then be able to inform me, he has restored to you the joys of his salvation. But if not yet, wait for him, and you shall not wait in vain.

I am, Madam,

Your's, &c.

L E T T E R III.

MY DEAR MADAM,

Temptations may be compared to the wind, which, when it has ceased raging from one point, after a short calm, frequently renews its violence from another quarter. The Lord silenced Satan's former assaults against you, but he is permitted to try you again in another way. Be of good courage, Madam, wait upon the Lord; and the present storm shall likewise subside in good time. You have an infallible pilot, and are embarked in a bottom against which the winds and waves cannot prevail. You may be tossed about and think yourself in apparent jeopardy, but sink you shall not, except the promises and faithfulness of God can fail. Upon an attentive consideration of your complaint, it seems to me to amount only to this, that though the Lord has done great things for you; he has not yet brought you to a state of independance on himself, nor released you from that impossibility which all his people feel of doing any thing without him. And is this indeed a matter of complaint? Is it not every way better, more for his glory, and more suited to keep us mindful of our obligations to him, and in the event more for our safety, that we should be reduced to a happy necessity of receiving daily out of his fulness (as the Israelites received the manna) than to be set up with something of a stock of wisdom, power and goodness of our own? Adam was thus furnished at the beginning with strength to stand, yet mutability being essential to a creature, he quickly fell and lost all. We who are by nature sinners, are not left to so hazardous an experiment. He has himself engaged to keep us, and treasured up all fulness of grace for our support, in a head who cannot fail. Our gracious Savior will communicate all needful supplies to his members, yet in such a manner that they shall feel their need and weakness, and have nothing to boast of from first to last but his wisdom, compassion and care. We are in no worse circumstances than the Apostle Paul, who, though eminent and exemplary in the Christian life, found and freely confessed that he had no sufficiency in himself to think a good thought. Nor did he wish it otherwise, he even gloried in his infirmities, that the power of Christ might rest upon him. Unbelief and a thousand evils are still in our hearts, though their reign and dominion is at an end; they are not slain or eradicated; their effects will be felt more or less sensibly as the Lord is pleased more or less to afford or abate his gracious influence. When they are kept down we are no better in ourselves, for they are not kept down by us; but we are very prone to think better of ourselves at such a time, and therefore he is pleased to permit us at seasons to feel a difference, that we may never forget how weak and how vile we are. We cannot absolutely conquer these evils, but it becomes us to be humbled for them, and we are to fight and strive and pray against them. Our great duty is to be at his footstool, and to cry to him who has promised to perform all things for us. Why are we called soldiers but because we are called to a warfare? And how could we fight if there were no enemies to resist? The Lord's soldiers are not merely for shew, to make an empty parade in a uniform, and to brandish their arms when none but friends and spectators are around them. No, we must stand upon the field of battle; we must face the fiery darts; we must wrestle (which is the closest and most arduous kind of fighting) with our foes; nor can we well expect wholly to escape wounds: but the leaves of the tree of life are provided for their healing. The Captain of our Salvation is at hand, and leads us on with an assurance, which might make even a coward bold—that in the end we shall be more than conquerors through him who has loved us.

I am ready to think, that some of the sentiments in your letters are not properly your's, such as you yourself have derived from the scriptures, but rather borrowed from authors or preachers, whose judgment your humility has led you to prefer to your own. At least, I am sure the scripture does not authorize the conclusion which distresses you, that if you were a child of God, you should not feel such changes and oppositions. Were I to define a Christian, or rather to describe him at large, I know no text I would chuse sooner, as a ground for the subject, than Gal. v. 17. A Christian has noble aims, which distinguish him from the bulk of mankind. His leading principles, motives and desires are all supernatural and divine. Could he do as he would, there is not a spirit before the throne

should excel him in holiness, love and obedience. He would tread in the very footsteps of his Savior, fill up every moment in his service, and employ every breath in his praise. This he would do, but alas! he cannot. Against this desire of the spirit, there is a contrary desire and working of a corrupt nature, which meets him at every turn. He has a beautiful copy set before him; he is enamored with it, and tho' he does not expect to equal it, he writes carefully after it, and longs to attain to the nearest possible imitation. But indwelling sin and Satan continually jog his hand and spoil his strokes. You cannot, Madam, form a right judgment of yourself, except you make due allowance for those things, which are not peculiar to yourself, but common to all who have spiritual perception, and are indeed the inseparable appendages of this mortal state. If it were not so, why should the most spiritual and gracious people be so ready to confess themselves vile and worthless? One eminent branch of our holiness is a sense of shame and humiliation for those evils which are only known to ourselves, and to him who searches our hearts, joined with an acquiescence in Jesus, who is appointed of God, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. I will venture to assure you, that though you will possess a more stable peace, in proportion as the Lord enables you to live more simply upon the blood, righteousness and grace of the Mediator, you will never grow into a better opinion of yourself than you have at present. The nearer you are brought to him, the quicker sense you will have of your continual need of him, and thereby your admiration admiration of his power, love and compassion will increase likewise from year to year.

I would observe farther, that our spiritual exercises are not a little influenced by our constitutional temperament. As you are only an ideal correspondent, I can but conjecture about you upon this head. If your frame is delicate, and your nervous system very sensible and tender, I should probably ascribe some of your apprehensions to this cause. It is an abstruse subject, and I will not enter into it; but according to the observations I have made, persons of this habit, seem to live more upon the confines of the invisible world, if I may so speak, and to be more susceptible of impressions from it, than others. That complaint, which for want of a better name, we call lowness of spirits, may probably afford the enemy some peculiar advantages and occasions of distressing you. The mind then perceives objects, as through a tintured medium, which gives them a dark and discouraging appearance. And I believe Satan has more influence and address than we are aware of, in managing the glass. And when this is not the case at all times, it may be so occasionally from sickness or other circumstances. You tell me that you have lately been ill, which, together with your present situation, and the prospect of your approaching hour, may probably have such an effect as I have hinted. You may be charging yourself with guilt, for what springs from indisposition, in which you are merely passive, and which may be no more properly sinful, than the head-ach, or any of the thousand natural shocks the flesh is heir to. The enemy can take no

advantage but what the Lord permits him, and he will permit him none, but what he designs to overrule for your greater advantage in the end. He delights in your prosperity, and you should not be in heaviness for an hour, were there not a need-be for it. Notwithstanding your fears, I have a good hope that he, who, you say, has helped you in six troubles, will appear for you in the seventh, that you will not die but live, and declare the works of the Lord, and come forth to testify to his praise, that he has turned your mourning into joy.

I am your's, &c.

DEAR MADAM,

YOU would have me tell you what are the best means to be used by a young person, to prevent the world, with all its opening and ensnaring scenes, from drawing the heart aside from God? It is an important question; but I apprehend your own heart will tell you, that you are already possessed of all the information concerning it which you can well expect from me. I could only attempt to answer it from the Bible, which lies open to you likewise. If your heart is like mine, it must confess, that when it turns aside from God, it is seldom through ignorance of the proper means or motives which should have kept us near him, but rather from an evil principle within, which prevails against our better judgment, and renders us unfaithful to light already received.

I could

I could offer you rules, cautions and advices in abundance ; for I find it comparatively easy to preach to others.—but if you should farther ask me, How you shall effectually reduce them to practice? I feel that I am so deficient, and so much at a loss in this matter myself, that I know not well what to say to you—Yet something must be said.

In the first place, then, I would observe, that though it be our bounden duty, and the highest privilege we can propose to ourselves, to have our hearts kept close to the Lord, yet we must not expect it absolutely or perfectly, much less all at once: we shall keep close to him, in proportion as we are solidly convinced of the infinite disparity between him, and the things which would presume to stand in competition with him, and the folly as well as ingratitude of departing from him. But these points are only to be learned by experience, and by smarting under a series of painful disappointments in our expectations from creatures. Our judgments may be quickly satisfied that his favor is better than life, while yet it is in the power of a mere trifle to turn us aside. The Lord permits us to feel our weakness, that we may be sensible of it ; for though we are ready in words, to confess that we are weak, we do not so properly know it, till that secret though unallowed dependance we have upon some strength in ourselves is brought to the trial and fails us. To be humble and like a little child, afraid of taking a step alone, and so conscious of snares and dangers around us, as to cry to him continually to hold us up that we may be safe, is the sure, the infallible, the only secret of walking closely with him.

But how shall we attain this humble frame of spirit? It must be, as I said, from a real and sensible conviction of our weakness and vileness, which we cannot learn (at least I have not been able to learn it) merely from books or preachers. The providence of God concurs with his Holy Spirit in his merciful design of making us acquainted with ourselves. It is indeed a great mercy to be preserved from such declensions as might fall under the notice of our fellow-creatures; but when they can observe nothing of consequence to object to us, things may be far from right with us in the sight of him who judges not only actions but the thoughts and first motions of the heart. And, indeed, could we for a season so cleave to God as to find little or nothing in ourselves to be ashamed of, we are such poor creatures that we should presently grow vain and self-sufficient, and expose ourselves to the greatest danger of falling.

There are, however, means to be observed on our part, and though you know them, I will repeat the principal, because you desire me. The first is prayer; and here above all things we should pray for humility. It may be called both the guard of all other graces and the soil in which they grow. The second, attention to the scripture.—Your question is directly answered in Psalms cxix. 9. 'The precepts are our rule and delight. The promises our strength and encouragement. The good recorded of the saints is proposed for our encouragement: their miscarriages are as land-marks set up to warn us of the rocks and shoals which lie in the way of our passage. The study of the whole scheme of gospel salvation, respecting the person, life, doctrine, death and glory of our Redeemer, is appointed to form our souls to a spiritual and divine taste; and, so far as this prevails and grows in us; the trifles that would draw us from the Lord, will lose their influence, and appear, divested of the glare with which they strike the senses, mere vanity and nothing. The third grand means is consideration or recollection; a careful regard to those temptations and snares, to which from our tempers, situations or connections, we are more immediately exposed, and by which we have been formerly hindered. It may be well in the morning, ere we leave our chambers, to forecast, as far as we are able, the probable circumstances of the day before us. Yet the observance of this, as well as of every rule that can be offered, may dwindle into a mere form. However, I trust the Lord, who has given you a desire to live to him, will be your guard and teacher. There is none teacheth like him. I am,

Your affectionate friend and servant.

LETTER II.

DEAR MADAM,

OUR experiences pretty much tally; they may be drawn out into sheets and quires, but the sum total may be comprized in a short sentence; Our life is a warfare. For our encouragement, the Apostle calls it a good warfare. We are engaged in a good cause, fight under a good Captain, the victory is sure beforehand, and the prize is a crown, a crown of life. Such considerations might make even a coward bold. But then we must be content to fight, and considering the nature, number, situation and subtilty of our enemies, we may expect sometimes to receive a wound; but there is a medicinal tree, the leaves of which are always at hand to heal us. We cannot be too attentive to the evil, which is always working in us, or to the stratagems which are employed against us, yet our attention should not be wholly confined to these things. We are to look upwards likewise to him, who is our head, our life, our strength. One glance of Jesus, will convey more effectual assistance than poring upon our own hearts for a month. The one is to be done, but the other should upon no account be omitted. It was not by counting their wounds, but by beholding the brazen serpent, the Lord's instituted means of cure, that the Israelites were healed. That was an emblem for our instruction. One great cause of our frequent conflicts, licts, is, that we have a secret desire to be rich, and it is the Lord's design to make us poor: We want to gain an ability of doing something; and he suits his dispensations, to convince us that we can do nothing. We want a stock in ourselves, and he would have us absolutely dependant upon him. So far as we are content to be weak, that his power may be magnified in us, so far we shall make our enemies know that we are strong, though we ourselves shall never be directly sensible that we are so; only by comparing what we are, with the opposition we stand against, we may come to a comfortable conclusion, that the Lord worketh mightily in us. Psalms xli. 11.

If our views are simple, and our desires towards the Lord, it may be of use to consider some of your faults and mine, not as the faults of you and me in particular, but as the fault of that depraved nature, which is common with us to all the Lord's people, and which made Paul groan as feelingly and as heartily as we can do. But this consideration, though true and scriptural, can only be safely applied, when the mind is sincerely and in good earnest devoted to the Lord. There are too many unsound and half-professors, who eagerly catch at it, as an excuse for those evils they are unwilling to part with. But I trust I may safely recommend it to you. This evil nature, this indwelling sin, is a living principle, an active, powerful cause, and a cause that is active will necessarily produce an effect. Sin is the same thing in believers, as in the unregenerate; they have indeed a contrary principle of grace, which counteracts and resists it, which can prevent its out-breakings, but will not suppress its risings. As grace resists sin, so sin resists grace. Gal. v. 17. The proper tendency of each, is mutually weakened on both sides; and between the two, the poor believer, however blameless and exemplary in the sight of men, appears in his own view the most inconsistent character under the sun. He can hardly think it is so with others, and judging of them by what he sees, and of himself by what he feels, in lowliness of heart, he esteems others better than himself. This proves him to be right, for it is the will of God concerning him. Phill. ii. 3. This is the warfare. But it shall not always be so. Grace shall prevail. The evil nature is already enervated, and ere long it shall die the death. Jesus will make us more than conquerors.

I am your's, &c.

I Suppose you will receive many congratulations on your recovery from your late dangerous illness; most of them perhaps more sprightly and better turned, but none, I persuade myself, more sincere and affectionate than mine. I beg you would prepare yourself by this good opinion of me, before you read further; and let the reality of my regard excuse what you may dislike in my manner of expressing it.

When a person is returned from a doubtful distant voyage, we are naturally led to inquire into the incidents he has met with, and the discoveries he has made. Indulge me in a curiosity of this kind, especially as my affection gives me an interest and concern in the event. You have been, my friend, upon the brink, the very edge of an eternal state, but God has restored you back to the world again.

Did you meet with, or have you brought back, nothing new? Did nothing occur to stop or turn your usual train of thought? Were your apprehensions of invisible things exactly the same in the height of your disorder, when you were cut off from the world and all its engagements, as when you were in perfect health and in the highest enjoyment of your own inclinations? If you answer me, “Yes, all things are just the same as formerly, the difference between sickness and health only excepted;” I am at a loss how to reply, I can only sigh and wonder; sigh, that it should be thus with any, that it should be thus with you whom I dearly love; and wonder, since this unhappy case, strange as it seems in one view, is yet so frequent, why it was not always thus with myself; for long and often it was just so. Many a time, when sickness had brought me, as we say, to death’s door, I was as easy and insensible as the sailor, who in the height of a storm should presume to sleep upon the top of the mast, quite regardless that the next tossing wave might plunge him into the raging ocean, beyond all possibility of relief. But at length a day came, which, though the most terrible day I ever saw, I can now look back upon with thankfulness and pleasure: I say the time came, when in such a helpless extremity, and under the expectation of immediate death, it pleased God to command the veil from my eyes, and I saw things in some measure as they really were. Imagine with yourself, a person trembling upon the point of a dreadful precipice, a powerful and inexorable enemy eager to push him down, and an assemblage of all that is horrible waiting at the bottom for his fall; even this will give you but a faint representation of the state of my mind at that time. Believe me, it was not a whim or a dream, which changed my sentiments and conduct, but a powerful conviction which will not admit the least doubt; an evidence which, like that I have of my own existence, I cannot call in question without contradicting all my senses. And though my case was in some respects uncommon, yet something like it is known by one and another every day: and I have myself conversed with many, who, after a course of years spent in defending deistical principles, or indulging libertine practices, when they have thought themselves confirmed in their schemes by the cool assent of what they then deemed Impartial Reason, have been like me brought to glory in the cross of Christ, and to live by that faith which they had before slighted and opposed. By these instances I know that nothing is too hard for the Almighty. The same power which humbled me, can undoubtedly bring down the most haughty infidel upon earth. And as I likewise know, that, to shew his power, he is often pleased to make use of weak instruments, I am encouraged, notwithstanding the apparent difficulty of succeeding, to warn those over whom friendship or affection gives me any influence, of the evil and the danger of a course of life formed upon the prevailing maxims of the world. So far as I neglect this, I am unfaithful in my professions both to God and man.

I shall not at present trouble you in an argumentative way. If by dint of reasoning I could effect some change in your notions, my arguments, unless applied by a superior power, would still leave your heart unchanged and untouched. A man may give his assent to the gospel, and be able to defend it against others, and yet not have his own spirit truly influenced by it. This thought I shall leave with you, that if your scheme be not true to a demonstration, it must necessarily be false; for the issue is too important to make a doubt on the dangerous side tolerable. If the Christian could possibly be mistaken, he is still upon equal terms with those who pronounce him to be so: but if the Deist be wrong (that is, if we are in the right) the consequence to him must be unavoidable and intolerable. This, you will say, is a trite argument: I own it; but beaten as it is, it will never be worn out or answered.

Permit me to remind you, that the points in debate between us are already settled in themselves, and that our talking cannot alter or affect the nature of things, for they will be as they are, whatever apprehensions we may form of them: and remember likewise, that we must all, each one for himself, experience on which side the truth lies. I used a wrong word when I spoke of your recovery; my dear friend, look upon it only as a reprieve, for you carry the sentence of death about with you still, and unless you should be cut off (which God of his mercy forbid!) by a sudden stroke, you will as surely lie upon a death-bed, as you have been now raised from a bed of sickness. And remember likewise (how can I bear to write it!) that, should you neglect my admonitions, they will notwithstanding withstanding have an effect upon you, though not such an effect as I could wish. They will render you more inexcusable. I have delivered my own soul by faithfully warning you: but if you will not examine the matter with that seriousness it calls for, if you will not look up to God, the former of your body, and the preserver of your spirit, for direction and assistance how to please him; if you will have your reading and conversation only on one side of the question; if you determine to let afflictions and dangers, mercies and deliverances, all pass without reflection and improvement; if you will spend your life as though you thought you were sent into the world only to eat, sleep and play, and, after a course of years, be extinguished like the snuff of a candle—why then, you must abide the consequences. But assuredly, sooner or later, God will meet you. My hearty daily prayer is, that it may be in a way of mercy, and that you may be added to the number of the trophies of his invincible grace. I am,

Your sincerely affectionate friend.

LETTER II.

DEAR SIR,

THOUGH I truly love you, and have no reason to doubt of the reality of your friendship to me; yet I cannot but apprehend that, notwithstanding our mutual regard, and my frequent attempts to be witty (if I could) for your diversion, there is something in most of my letters (which I cannot, dare not, wholly suppress) that disgusts and wearies you, and makes you less inclined to keep up a frequent intercourse, than you would otherwise be. Rather than lose you quite, I will in general spare you as much as I can; but at present you must bear with me, and allow me full scope. You have given me a challenge which I know not how to pass over; and since you so far justify my preaching, as to condescend to preach (in your way) yourself, permit me for this time to preach again, and to take some passages in your letter for my text.

In the present debate, I will accept your compliment, and suppose myself to be, as you say, a Man of Sense. You allow, then, that all the sense is not on your side. This indeed you cannot deny; for whatever becomes of me, it is needless to tell you, that Hale, Boyle, and other great names I could mention, were men of as great penetration and judgment, had as good opportunities, and took as much pains to be informed of the truth, as any of the advocates for infidelity can pretend to. And you cannot, with any modesty or consistence, absolutely determine, that they had not as good grounds for thinking themselves right, as you can have for concluding they were wrong.

But declining the advantage of human authority, I am content the point shall rest between you and me. And here I beg you to observe, that I have one evident advantage over you in judging, namely, that I have experienced the good and evil on both sides, and you only on one. If you were to send me an inventory of your pleasures, how charmingly your time runs on, and how dexterously it is divided between the coffee-houses, play-house, the card-table and tavern, with intervals of balls, concerts, &c.; I could answer, that most of these I have tried and tried again, and know the utmost they can yield, and have seen enough of the rest, most heartily to despise them all. Setting religion intirely out of the question, I profess I had rather be a worm to crawl upon the ground, than to bear the name of MAN upon the poor terms of whiling away my life in an insipid round of such insignificant and unmanly trifles. I will return your own expression—I believe you to be a person of sense; but, alas! how do you prostitute your talents and capacity, how far do you act below yourself, if you know no higher purpose of life than these childish dissipations, together with the more serious business of rising early and sitting up late, to amass money, that you may be able to enlarge your expences! I am sure, while I lived in these things, I found them unsatisfying and empty to the last degree; and the only advantage they afforded (miserable are they who are forced to deem it an advantage) was, that they often relieved me from the trouble and burden of thinking. If you have any other pleasures than these, they are such as must be evil and inconvenient even upon your own plan; and therefore my friendship will not allow me to bring them into the account. I am willing to hope you do not stoop still lower in pursuit of satisfaction. Thus far we stand upon even ground. You know all that a life of pleasure can give, and I know it likewise.

On the other hand, if I should attempt to explain to you the source and streams of my best pleasures, such as a comfortable assurance of the pardon of my sins, an habitual communion with the God who made heaven and earth, a calm reliance on the Divine Providence, the cheering prospect of a better life in a better world, with the pleasing foretastes of heaven in my own soul; should I, or could I, tell you the pleasure I often find in reading the scripture, in the exercise of prayer, and in that sort of preaching and conversation which you despise; I doubt not but you would think as meanly of my happiness as I do of your's. But here lies the difference (my dear friend); you condemn that which you have never tried. You know no more of these things than a blind man does of colors; and, notwithstanding all your flourishes, I defy you to be at all times able to satisfy yourself, that things may not possibly be as I have represented them.

Besides, what do I lose upon my plan, that should make me so worthy of your pity? Have you a quicker relish in the prudent use of temporal comforts?

comforts? Do you think I do not eat my food with as much pleasure as you can do, though perhaps with less cost and variety? Is your sleep sounder than mine? Have not I as much satisfaction in social life? It is true, to join much with the gay, fluttering tribe, who spend their days in laugh and sing-song, is equally contrary to my duty and inclination. But I have friends and acquaintance as well as you. Among the many who favor me with their esteem and friendship, there are some who are persons of sense, learning, wit, and (what perhaps may weigh as much with you) of fortune and distinction. And if you should say, "Ay, but they are all enthusiasts like yourself," you would say nothing to the purpose, since, upon your maxim, that 'happiness is according to opinion,' it cannot be an objection, but the contrary, to have my acquaintance to my own taste. Thus much for the brighter side of your situation—or let me add one thing more. I know you have thoughts of marriage: do you think, if you should enter into this relation, your principles are calculated to make you more happy in it than I am? You are well acquainted with our family life. Do you propose to know more of the peace and heart-felt joy of domestic union, than I have known and continue to know to this hour. I wish you may equal us; and if you do, we shall still be as before, but upon even ground. I need not turn Deist to enjoy the best and the most that this life can afford.

But I need not tell you, that the present life is not made up of pleasurable incidents only. Pain, sickness, losses, disappointments, injuries and affronts will more or less at one time or other be our lot, And can you bear these trials better than I? You will not pretend to it. Let me appeal to yourself: how often do you toss and disquiet yourself, like a wild bull in a net, when things cross your expectations? As your thoughts are more engrossed by what you see, you must be more keenly sensible of what you feel. You cannot view these trials as appointed by a wise and heavenly Father in subsequence to your good; you cannot taste the sweetness of his promises, nor feel the secret supports of his strength in an hour of affliction; you cannot so cast your burden and care upon him, as to find a sensible relief to your spirit thereby, nor can you see his hand engaged and employed in effecting your deliverance. Of these things you know no more than of the art of flying; but I seriously assure you, and I believe my testimony will go farther with you than my judgment, that they are realities, and that I have found them to be so. When my worldly concerns have been most thorny and discouraging, I have once and again felt the most of that peace which the world can neither give nor take away. However, I may state the case still lower. You do pretty well among your friends, but how do you like being alone? Would you not give something for that happy secret, which could enable you to pass a rainy day pleasantly, without the assistance of business, company or amusement? Would it not mortify you greatly to travel for a week in an unfrequented road, where you should meet with no lively incidents to recruit and raise your spirits?

Alas ! what a poor scheme of pleasure is your's, that will not support an interval of reflection !

What you have heard is true ; I have a few friends who meet at my house once a fortnight, and we spend an hour or two in worshipping the God who made us. And can this move your indignation, or your compassion ? Does it shew a much nobler spirit, a more refined way of thinking, to live altogether without God in the world ? If I kept a card assembly at those times, it would not displease you. How can you, as a person of sense, avoid being shocked at your own unhappy prejudice ? But I remember how it was once with myself, and forbear to wonder. May he who has opened my eyes, open your's. He only can do it. I do not expect to convince you by any thing I can say as of myself ; but if he be pleased to make use of me as his instrument, then you will be convinced. How should I then rejoice ! I should rejoice to be useful to any one, but especially to you, whom I dearly love. May God shew you your true self, and your true state, then you will attentively listen to what you now disdain to hear of ; his goodness in providing redemption and pardon for the chief of sinners, through him who died upon the cross for sins not his own. Keep this letter by you at my request ; and when you write, tell me that you receive it in good part, and that you still believe me to be

Your sincere and affectionate friend.
